SECTION I – THE MILITARY ACADEMY

1. HISTORICAL SKETCH

West Point was first occupied by troops during the Revolutionary War, on 20 January 1778. It is therefore the oldest of the United States military posts now in use. Because of its strategic importance in the defense of the Hudson River Valley and of the communications between the New England and Middle Atlantic States, it was heavily fortified. The story of Benedict Arnold's attempt to betray it is familiar to every American.

The proposal to found a military academy was first made by Brig. Gen. Henry Knox in 1776 and was seconded by Col. Alexander Hamilton and Gen. George Washington. The latter selected West Point as a suitable site and repeatedly urged upon Congress the necessity for establishing the Academy. Although several attempts to found a military school at West Point were made at various times from 1781 to 1794, they were unsuccessful because of inadequate provision of funds and facilities. Washington's last official letter, written only 2 days before his death, was a strong recommendation that a military academy be founded in order that the Nation might have a cadre of trained officers, the lack of which had been a serious handicap to him in the War of Independence.

The present Military Academy dates from the act of 16 March 1802 when Congress, yielding to President Jefferson's advice and, considering the threat of war with France, authorized a Corps of Engineers, to consist of 5 officers and 10 cadets, and provided that it should be stationed at West Point, in the State of New York, and should constitute a Military Academy. The post then consisted of 1,795 acres which had been purchased from Stephen Moore in 1790, although it had been occupied by the Army ever since the Revolution. The barracks and other buildings on the site, while inadequate, were available for the new institution. Col. Jonathan Williams, grandnephew of Benjamin Franklin, was therefore able to open the Academy formally on 4 July 1802, with 10 cadets present for instruction.

Congress, having founded the Military Academy, took little interest in it for several years thereafter. Lacking funds, professors, and facilities, the Academy struggled on until the War of 1812. The declaration of war found it empty of both faculty and cadets, who had been dispersed to various assignments, while some hundreds of new appointments over a period years were left invalidated by the Office of the Secretary of War. Nevertheless, the record of the war showed that the graduates, although too young to hold high command, performed creditably and rendered important services as engineers. A quarter of the more than a hundred West Pointers engaged were killed or wounded. Not one of the fortifications constructed by them fell to the enemy; and their works were a decisive factor in winning the ultimate victory.

Spurred by the war crisis, Congress provided for the reorganization of the Military Academy by its act of 29 April 1812. A more adequate corps of professors was authorized, a maximum strength of 250 cadets was fixed, and age and mental requirements for admission were prescribed.

The Academy, however, did not flourish. In 1815 Congress failed to appropriate funds for its support; and its second superintendent, Maj. Joseph G. Swift, met the crisis by borrowing $65,000 from private sources on his own credit. Both administration and instruction suffered from the neglect occasioned by Swift's dual responsibility for the Academy and for the construction of harbor defenses elsewhere. Although the act of 1812 had provided a more adequate legal basis for the institution, Congress had failed to follow through with legislation to establish improved operating procedures.

The United States Military Academy, as it now exists, is largely the creation of Maj. (later Colonel) Sylvanus Thayer, who was appointed to the superintendency by President James Monroe. He assumed command on 28 July 1817, and immediately proceeded to inaugurate those features which have ever since characterized the West Point system. His achievements rightly earned for him the title of "Father of the Military Academy."

In general outline, Colonel Thayer's system was founded, first of all, on character. He insisted upon absolute honesty and complete integrity. Secondly he established a curriculum as broad as was consisten with the primary demands of professional training. Lastly, he made it necessary for every cadet to exercise his own facilities to the utmost, to the end that his mind and character might attain their maximum development.

For many years West Point, aside from its military functions, was the only engineering school in the country; and until after the Civil War it was the only one to produce any considerable number of engineers. For this reason all of the main and transcontinental railroad lines were the work of West Pointers. The latter mapped the coasts, charted the harbors, built the lighthouses and coastal fortifications, surveyed frontiers, and constructed most of the important public improvements of that day.

Although there were no graduates among the general officers at the outbreak of the Mexican War, the services of West Pointers were so brilliant that Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott, the Commander-in-Chief, paid them a glowing tribute in which he assigned them the major share of credit for the victory. Robert E. Lee, Sherman, Sumner, Hooker, McClellan, Grant, and "Stonewall" Jackson were among those who distinguished themselves.

In the Civil War, West Pointers again started in subordinate capacities in the Union Army, chiefly because of the Government's propensity for appointing "political generals" from civil life. Thanks to their training and ability, however, the graduates rose rapidly as the war progressed, until by January 1865, all of the general officers of the line were West Pointers. The Confederacy, on the other hand, was quick to take advantage of the services of graduates who adhered to its cause.

At the end of the Civil War, West Pointers were at the heads of the opposing armies. They had commanded the forces on at least one side, and usually on both sides, in every major engagement. Men like Lee, Grant, Sherman, and "Stonewall" Jackson had added a new luster to the Academy's reputation.

In 1866, the diminishing national role of the Academy in engineering education and its broadening military responsibilities were recognized to the extent that line officers, as well as members of the Corps of Engineers, were made eligible for the superintendency. The transition was reflected in progressive changes in the curriculum which have continued to the present.

Graduates served on the frontiers, protecting settlers and controlling the Indians, until the Spanish-American War. In that conflict they again served with credit, and performed a highly constructive task in governing Cuba and the Philippines for some years afterward.

The First World War once more put West Point to the test. Gen. Peyton C. March, the Chief of Staff, and Gen. John J. Pershing, the commander in France, were both graduates, as were Generals Liggett, Bullard, and Dickman, who commanded the field armies. Of the 38 corps and division commanders who commanded in France at the end of the war, 34 were West Pointers.

Early graduations during the war caused confusion and disruption of the Academy's curriculum. Only by 1921 was a return to the regular 4-year course possible.

The new curriculum was adopted after careful study of postwar conditions and consultation with civilian educators. New courses in economics and government were added, the time devoted to English was increased, and all courses were greatly improved. Military training was brought up-to-date, and a program of prescribed intramural athletics (the first in the country) was instituted.

On 22 June 1926, a separate Department of Economics, Government, and History was created in recognition of the increased importance of those subjects. Again, in 1931, a new Department of Physics was set up to take care of basic instruction in the natural sciences and to enable the other scientific departments to concentrate on more advanced work. The Department was permanently established by law on 26 May 1934.

Another extensive revision of the curriculum took place in 1933. Other developments followed: Closer contacts with civilian institutions, the granting of the degree of Bachelor of Science to graduates, more extentive employment of university training to prepare instructors for their duties, frequent invitations to outside lecturers, and an enlarged program of extra-curricular activities. The entrance requirements were revised so as to reduce the number of failures after admission. And, finally, the authorized strength of the Corps of Cadets was raised to 1960 by the act of 7 June 1935.

Along with successive increases in the number of cadets since 1900, there have been corresponding building programs and expansions of the Academy's domain. Most of the Gothic buildings which give West Point its special architectural effect are the result of this development. Land purchases have increased the size of the reservation to 15,085 acres at West Point and 1,674 at nearby Stewart Field, where aviation training is given. Three additional areas in the general vicinity of Stewart Field were leased and developed for use as emergency landing fields.

During World War II, the confusion and the lowering of standards that had occurred at West Point during the First World War were avoided by foresight and planning. The increased demand for West Point-trained officers was met by raising the authorized strength of the Corps of Cadets to 2,496 (act of 3 June 1942); by graduating the class of 1943 on 19 January of that year, and the class of 1944 on the first of the following June; and by reducing the length of the course to 3 years. A transition program was put into effect on 16 September 1942, which worked very smoothly.

Pursuant to the request of the Army Air Forces, West Point accelerated its development of Stewart Field and undertook to graduate Air Cadets fully trained as pilots. Hitherto, only observation flights and general instruction in the employment of air forces had been given. On 31 May 1943, Gen. H. H. Arnold awarded wings to the first class ever to graduate from West Point as full-fledged pilots. Of the 2,624 officers graduated by the Military Academy during the war, 825 were commissioned in the Army Air Forces.

An equally modern and intensive program of training for Ground Cadets was introduced, embodying the latest lessons learned from the battlefields. Camp Buckner in the newly acquired area was developed as a base for the summer training program. Maneuvers and observation tours at Pine Camp, Ft. Benning, and other training centers rounded out the basic instruction given at Camp Buckner.

Approximately 8,800 graduates of West Point saw active service during the war. Although they constituted less than 2 percent of all officers in the Army of the United States, they furnished 83 percent of the general, 65 percent of the lieutenant generals and 55 percent of the major generals (exclusive of medical officers). The commanders of the Ground, Air, and Service Forces were graduates, as were the two Supreme Commanders of the Allied Forces, General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower in Europe and General of the Army Douglas MacArthur in the Pacific.

In September 1945 the Academy announced its return to the 4-year course. A new curriculum and plans for putting it into effect were approved. The third class was divided in half; one-half to graduate in June 1947, and the other half in June 1948. A board of consultants, with members representing the Army and civilian educational institutions, was convened to pass upon the proposed curriculum and make general recommendations as to the conduct of the Academy.

Under the new plan, pilot training was dropped; but all cadets were given aviation training sufficient to provide them with a grasp of air operations. This change was necessary in order to allow time for military and academic subjects of more general importance to Army officers. Amphibious training with the Midshipmen of the Naval Academy was instituted, and an exchange of instructors between the two service academies was begun.

The proven methods of the past were adhered to, but modifications and additions in keeping with experience in the war were adopted. A Dean of the Academic Board with rank of Brigadier General was appointed, and Congress authorized nine new permanent professors. The basic sciences, chemistry and physics, were grouped under the Department of Physics; and additional time was allotted for the study of nuclear physics. The course in the Department of Electricity was extended to include electronics and communications. The course in Economics, Government, and History was expanded to include geography and military government, and a more thorough study of international relations and the economies of war. The list of languages taught by the Department of Modern Languages was increased to five by the inclusion of Russian. A course in the Psychology of Military Leadership was introduced under the Department of Tactics. Procedures for determining Physical Proficiency and Aptitude for the Service were prescribed, and success in them was made an additional requirement for graduation. And finally, all methods of tactical training and leadership were directed towards fitting the graduate to lead the American citizen soldier. The total number of graduates, including foreigners receiving instruction under Acts of Congress, from 1802 to 1948 inclusive, is 16,772.

2. COMMENDATORY REFERENCES TO THE ACADEMY

"I have duly received your letter of the 28th ultimo, enclosing a copy of what you had written to the Secretary of War, on the subject of a Military Academy.

"The establishment of an Institution of this kind, upon a respectable and extensive basis, has ever been considered by me as an object of primary importance to this country; and while I was in the Chair of Government, I omitted no proper opportunity of recommending it, in my public speeches and other ways, to the attention of the Legislature. But I never undertook to go into a detail of the organization of such an academy; leaving this task to others whose pursuits in the paths of science, and attention to the arrangements of such institutions, had better qualified them for the execution of it. For the same reason I must now decline making any observations on the details of your plan; and as it has already been submitted to the Secretary of War, through whom it would naturally be laid before Congress, it might be too late for alterations if any should be suggested.

"I sincerely hope that the subject will meet with due attention, and that the reasons for its establishment which you have so clearly pointed out in your letter to the Secretary, will prevail upon the Legislature to place it upon a permanent and respectable footing."—George Washington. (Letter to Alexander Hamilton dated Mount Vernon, 12 December 1799, two days before General Washington died.)

"I recommend to your fostering care, as one of our safest means of national defense, the Military Academy. This institution has already exercised the happiest influence upon the moral and intellectual character of our Army; and such of the graduates as from various causes may not pursue the profession of arms will be scarcely less useful as citizens. Their knowledge of the military art will be advantageously employed in the militia service, and in a measure secure to that class of troops the advantages which in this respect belong to standing armies."—Andrew Jackson. (Extract from his First Message to Congress, December, 1829.)

"I give it as my fixed opinion, that but for our graduated cadets, the war between the United States and Mexico might, and probably would, have lasted some four or five years, with, in its first half, more defeats than victories falling to our share; whereas, in less than two campaigns, we conquered a great country and a peace, without the loss of a single battle or skirmish."—Winfield Scott. (Extract from a letter written by him July 25, 1860, to Lieutenant Ives, Secretary to the U. S. Military Academy Commission.)

"The foregoing considerations naturally bring to mind the Military Academy at West Point. I believe that the great service which it has rendered the country was never more conspicuous than it has been during the past two years. The faithful and efficient services of its graduates since the declaration of war with Spain have more than repaid the cost of the institution since its foundation. They have been too few in number and most heavily burdened."—Elihu Root. (Extract from his report as Secretary of War, June 30, 1899.)

"This institution has completed its first hundred years of life. During that century no other educational institution in the land has contributed so many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the nation's greatest citizens."—Theodore Roosevelt. (Extract from his address at the Centennial Exercises U. S. Military Academy, June 11, 1902.)

"In the World War, West Point again demonstrated its supreme value to the country in the hour of need. Our great overseas army was made and led by West Point men and the incredible swiftness with which it was trained for its great task is a tribute to the fineness of the raw material and also to the leadership generated by West Point. In all walks of life character is the indispensable basis of enduring success. West Point does many things for its men, but the highest quality it gives them is character and in the emergency of the World War, our success rested upon the character of our leaders. It, therefore, finally rested upon West Point."—Newton D. Baker. (Extract from a letter written by him March 27, 1928, to Major William R. Smith, Superintendent, U. S. Military Academy.)

"What the Academy stands for has always been my guide throughout my military career, and to have approached the high ideals of duty, honor and service to the country that are the real spirit of West Point, has to me a meaning that nothing else has. The longer I live, and the further I have gone on in the service, the more I reverence the things that inspire the heart and soul of young men at West Point.

"I can only add that West Point has again, in this war, demonstrated its usefulness and justified itself a hundred times over in furnishing to this great American Army in Europe the splendid men who have served here in the old West Point spirit."—(Extracts from a letter from General John J. Pershing, January 11, 1929.)

3. MISSION

The mission of the United States Military Academy is to instruct and train the Corps of Cadets so that each graduate will have the qualities and attributes essential to his progressive and continued development throughout a lifetime career as an officer of the Regular Army. AR 350-5, dated 12 September 1946.

4. CALENDAR, 1947-48

5. DIRECTION AND SUPERVISION

Direction and supervision of the Military Academy are vested by law in the Department of the Army under such officer or officers as the Secretary of the Army may select, and, in accordance with this provision, the Chief of Staff has been designated as the officer in charge of all matters pertaining to the institution.

6. BOARD OF VISITORS

The Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, as provided by an Act of Congress approved 29 June 1948, consists of

a. The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate;

b. Three other Members of the Senate to be appointed by the Vice President, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate;

c. The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives;

d. Four other Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives;

e. Six persons to be appointed by the President.

The law prescribes that the Board visit the Military Academy in April of each year and inquire into the state of morale and discipline, curriculum, instruction, physical equipment, fiscal affairs, academic methods, and other matters relating to the Academy which the Board may decide to consider, submitting a written report to the President regarding its views and recommendations pertaining to the Academy.

Note.—The selection of the Superintendents of the Military Academy was confined to the Corps of Engineers from the establishment of the Institution, March 16, 1802, till the passage of the law of July 13, 1866, which opened it to the entire Army. By the Act of June 12, 1856, the local rank of Colonel was conferred upon the Superintendent.

[1] Major Williams resigned June 20, 1803, on a point of command, and pending its settlement until April 19, 1805, when he again returned to service as Chief Engineer, no permanent Superintendent of the Military Academy was appointed, the command devolving upon the senior officer of the Corps of Engineers present for duty.

[2] Bvt. Major P. G. T. Beauregard, Corps of Engineers, by order of John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, relieved Colonel Delafield, Jan. 23, 1861, from the superintendency of the Military Academy, but was himself displaced five days later Jan. 28, 1861, by direction of the succeeding Secretary of War Joseph Holt, the command again devolving upon Colonel Delafield.

SECTION III – CADETS

1. CLASSIFICATION

The Cadets are arranged in four distinct classes, corresponding with the four years of study. The Cadets employed on the first year's course constitute the Fourth Class; those on the second year's course the Third Class; those on the third year's course the Second Class; and those on the fourth year's course the First Class. In no case is a Cadet advanced from one class to another without having satisfied the Academic Board of his proficiency in each branch of study pursued by his class.

2. CORPS ORGANIZATION

For instruction in Infantry Drill and in Military Police and Discipline, the Corps of Cadets is organized into a Brigade of two regiments consisting of three battalions each, under the Commandant of Cadets, assisted by two regimental commanders and their staffs (army officers), each company being commanded by an officer of the army. Cadet officers and noncommissioned officers are in general selected from those cadets having the highest rating in Military Efficiency and Conduct. Captains, Lieutenants, Master Sergeants, First Sergeants, Staff Sergeants, Supply Sergeants (Staff Sergeants) and Sergeants are selected from the First Class, and Corporals from the Second Class.
