2. Prayer by Chaplain Wheat of the U. S. Military Academy.

5. The report of the Treasurer was read and approved.
6. The report of the Executive Committee of the Association was then read to the meeting by the Secretary. It was as follows:

REPORT OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, ASSOCIATION OF GRADUATES, JUNE 11, 1925

In accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and notice duly sent out by its chairman, the Executive Committee of the Association met at West Point, N. Y., June 10, 1925, at 3:00 p. m.

The following members, constituting a quorum, were present:

Arrangements for Annual Meeting

The Secretary presented the plan of arrangements for the luncheon and Annual Meeting, which were approved by the committee.

Chapel Organ

The Secretary laid before the committee correspondence and other data relating to the Harmonic Division of the Organ in the Cadet Chapel. The proposal that the Association undertake to install this harmonic organ was discussed at the annual meeting in June, 1923, and was again referred to a committee in June, 1924.

At the last annual meeting it was reported that this addition to the present organ could not be installed without enlarging the organ loft of the building. To do this would require alterations in the Chapel itself, thus greatly increasing the expense.

Since the last meeting further study of the question, mainly by the organist, Mr. Mayer, has shown that the entire proposed addition can be accommodated in the present organ loft by making a complete rearrangement of all the pipes already installed and by making changes in, and additions to, the present blower plant. There is thus no further question of making any changes in the chapel building itself.

After reviewing all the facts and estimates, the committee unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee of the Association of Graduates favors and approves the installation of an harmonic organ as an addition to the chapel organ, this organ to cost approximately $15,000, and recommends that the raising of funds, approval of plans and drawings, and construction and work be placed in the hands of an Organ Committee, to be appointed by the President of the Association, which committee shall have full power to act within the limits imposed by this resolution."

Changes in Membership

The committee then discussed at length the question of admitting non-graduates of the Academy to membership in the Association, the matter having been brought up by resolutions on the subject passed at the West Point Dinner in Atlanta, Ga., March 21, 1925, which resolutions had been forwarded to the Secretary of the Association. At the same time the Secretary presented to the committee letters from a number of graduates, some favoring the resolutions and some opposing them.

Inasmuch as this proposal is one involving changes in the Constitution of the Association, and inasmuch as it has been discussed at meetings for many years without any decision having been reached, the committee was unanimous in believing that the question should be given very careful and detailed study. The committee therefore voted that the Chairman of the Executive Committee should appoint a special committee to make a thorough study of the question of admitting non-graduates to membership or associate membership in the Association and that this special committee should submit a complete report with their recommendations at the next annual meeting of the Association.

Sections of the Association

The Secretary read to the committee letters received from groups of West Point graduates in Washington, D. C., and Detroit, Michigan, showing the spirit and enthusiasm manifested at the annual West Point Dinners in March of this year, and expressing the desires of these groups to work in co-operation with the officials of the Association towards promoting the interests of the Association and of the Military Academy. The committee noted with pleasure the effective work accomplished by these local groups and passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Association of Graduates should authorize the organization in the cities of our country, in the insular possessions, and in the Canal Zone, of sections of the Association and of the Military Academy. The committee noted with pleasure the effective work accomplished by these local groups and passed the following resolution: The Association pledges its support to these sections."

New Memorial Hall

The committee then discussed with the Superintendent the more pressing needs of the Academy and the possibility of the Association helping to see that some of the needs be supplied. Among other things the discussion brought out the fact that Memorial Hall is inadequate in size to answer many of the purposes for which it was originally intended, and that the available space for memorials is nearly all filled up or assigned. If West Point is to memorialize her distinguished sons of more recent years by portraits, tablets, and similar memorials, then there must be a new Memorial Hall. This must be a building worthy of its purpose and on a site fully in keeping.

As a result of the discussion the committee adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Association of Graduates should put itself on record as favoring a new Memorial Hall located on or near the site of the present West Point Hotel."

Balance from Window Fund

The Treasurer of the Association invited the attention of the committee to the item of his annual report showing an unexpended balance from the installation of the north window in the cadet chapel, and also pointed out that the best and most suitable way of employing this balance would be to use it for needed purposes in connection with the various windows already installed or to be installed in the Chapel. The committee then adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the unexpended balance remaining from the funds raised by the Association for the installation of the north window in the cadet Chapel should be left at the disposal of the Memorial Window Committee for such use as it may think best in connection with the installation, repair and upkeep of memorial windows in the cadet chapel."

Special Resolution

The committee then adopted the following special resolution:

"Resolved, That the Association of Graduates instructs its Secretary to convey to the Hon. John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, its sincere appreciation of his continued interest in West Point and its hopes for his speedy recovery."

Nominations

In accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2, By-Laws of the Association, the Executive Committee presents to the annual meeting its nominations for President and Vice-President of the Association for the coming year:

For President—John J. Pershing, 1886.

For Vice-President—William N. Dykman, 1875.

R. G. ALEXANDER,

Secretary.

7. Upon completion of the reading of the report of the Executive Committee, Bellinger, 1884, moved approval of the report and adoption of the resolutions therein. The motion was seconded by Tillman, 1869, and unanimously passed.
8. The nominations of the Executive Committee having been accepted unanimously, the following were elected for the ensuing year:

For President—Pershing, 1886.

For Vice-President—Dykman, 1875.

9. The President then made the following remarks:

"In accepting this very great honor again, I feel as though I should offer an apology for my shortcomings during the past year, although, perhaps, it is unnecessary. Of course you all know that I have been absent from the country and have really been unable to actively participate in the affairs of the Association. However, I think that the present arrangement of having an Executive Committee always on the job relieves, to a certain extent, the President and Vice-President of the burden of their responsibilities.

The report of the Executive Committee seems to me most excellent, as one would expect from a glance at the personnel in that committee. It is especially gratifying to hear that the new arrangements for the organ's harmonic addition can be made without undue complications.

The change in membership is a matter which should be carefully considered. The Executive Committee will very properly handle that.

I believe that this year we have about the largest attendance of members of the Association we have ever had. This is very gratifying.

It shows a new interest in this wonderful institution and it should receive the attention and untiring support of all graduates. To me, the meeting here of the members of this Association is most important and most impressive, especially since the present Superintendent has adopted the plan of having the corps pass in review instead of the graduates.

West Point, I believe, and its methods are becoming better known every year. West Point teaches the discipline and loyalty which create and make soldiers of us. This has been proved by the eminently successful careers of many of our fellow alumni and it seems to me that we never sufficiently stressed this particular advantage of West Point. There is no better training for any career in life than the training one receives here. As the facts become known to more and more people, we are destined to receive increasing support from them. I trust that next year the meeting will be larger than it was this year, and I thank you very much for the honor that you have again conferred upon me, and I trust that when I appear before you next year, if I may be so fortunate, I shall have no apologies to make."

10. Robinson, 1887, then said:

"It has been the custom at our annual meetings to recall our oldest living graduate and to signify it by sending a message of felicitation. I have endeavored to draw up such a telegram, which I move be sent to Henry L. Abbot, Class of 1854. The message is as follows:

"The Association of Graduates of the Military Academy here today at our annual meeting, tender to you who graduated 71 years ago their highest regards and best wishes for health and happiness.

(Signed) PERSHING,
President."

The motion was seconded by Echols, 1891, and unanimously adopted.

11. Hine, 1891, then asked that the senior graduate present address the meeting.

12. In response, Schaff, 1862, the oldest graduate present, rose and spoke as follows:

"As you see, I am not very much of a man to look at. However, I wish to speak a few words regarding the proposal the committee made here today about building the new Memorial Hall. I can think of no greater or better memorial than a building for the boys who carried the American flag over to Europe, led by the man who is here today as President of our Association.

"I would like to see some recognition given to the men who are entitled to it, and for this reason I am sure that many of the men whose portraits are here on the walls today would say so if they could.

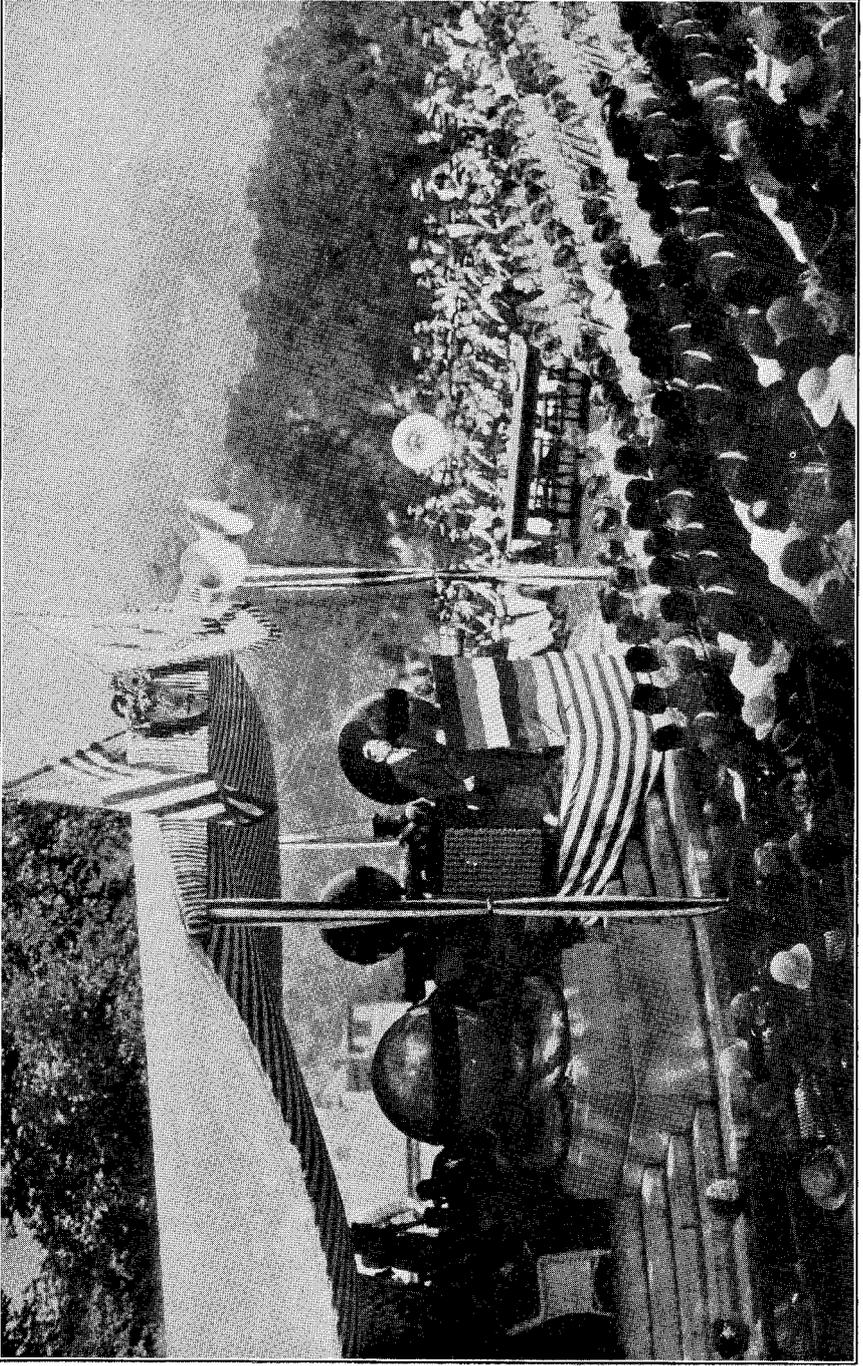

"They are not yet suitably recognized here at West Point. Build a Memorial Hall dedicated to honor and righteousness, for these are the two things that every one would like to be honored by. Build an imposing building that shall have a tower that reaches as high as the heavens. There should be a place here at West Point where our exercises can be held with dignity worthy of the place itself.

"Let West Point have one thing that no other institution has, let it have a Memorial Hall that is dedicated to honor and righteousness. Other institutions can teach scientists, lawyers, literary men, and doctors, but West Point is a place that turns out men of character and honor. I can see nothing in all this character of men that is lacking, there is nothing else, in my judgment, that will do more to help West Point than to build this memorial that has been proposed."

13. On account of other events scheduled for the day, the meeting then adjourned at 3:00 p. m.

R. G. ALEXANDER,
Secretary.

TULLY McCREA

No. 1980. Class of 1862.

Died, September 5, 1918, at West Point, New York, aged 79 years.

Tully McCrea was born in Mississippi, July 23, 1839. He was appointed to the Military Academy from Ohio and entered in 1858, graduating June 17, 1862. Appointed a Second Lieutenant, 1st Artillery, he plunged at once in the great war then in progress.

With his battery he served in the Virginia Peninsula Campaign (Army of the Potomac); in the Maryland Campaign (Army of the Potomac), being engaged in the Battle of Antietam; in the Rappahannock Campaign (Army of the Potomac), being engaged in the Battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville; and in the Pennsylvania Campaign (Army of the Potomac), being engaged in the Battle of Gettysburg. He was made Brevet First Lieutenant for gallant and meritorious services at the Battle of Antietam, and Brevet Captain for gallant and meritorious services at the Battle of Gettysburg.

In September, 1863, he was transferred to the Department of the South and served in South Carolina and Florida, being engaged in the Battle of Olustee, February 20, 1864, where he was very severely wounded. He received his promotion to First Lieutenant, 1st Artillery, November 4, 1863, and was made Brevet Major, February 20, 1864, for gallant and meritorious services at the Battle of Olustee.

He was slow to recover from his wound and suffered from it for the remainder of his life. When able to return to service he was sent back to West Point, where he served first as Assistant Professor of Geography, History, and Ethics, and then as Assistant Professor of Mathematics.

Promoted Captain, 42d Infantry, July 28, 1866, he served a short tour of duty on recruiting service and then served in garrison at Madison Barracks, New York, and then at Fort Porter, New York. He was Quartermaster of the Military Academy from 1868 to 1872, and then Deputy Governor of the Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C., from 1872 to 1875.

He had been transferred back to the Artillery in 1870, and from 1875 to 1896 he served with that arm at various posts throughout the country, including St. Augustine, Florida; Fort Trumbull, Connecticut;

Fort Sill, Indian Territory; Presidio of San Francisco, California; Fort Winfield Scott, California; Vancouver Barracks, Washington; Fort Canby, Washington, and Fort Slocum, New York. He received his promotion to Major, 5th Artillery, in 1888.

He received his promotion to Lieutenant Colonel, 5th Artillery, March 8, 1898, and during the Spanish-American War commanded first Fort Hancock, New Jersey, and then Fort Wadsworth, New York. He was promoted Colonel, 6th Artillery, July 15, 1900, and ordered to the Philippines, where he was in command of the Cartel de Espagna, Manila, until he returned to the United States in the late fall of 1901 and took command of the Artillery District of Puget Sound.

He was promoted Brigadier General, U. S. A., February 21, 1903, and the next day he retired at his own request, after over forty years' service. The last years of his life were spent at West Point, where he died September 5, 1918, at the ripe age of 79 years.

The foregoing is but the briefest outline of the long and faithful service of General McCrea, and it shows him as a young officer fighting for his country with such dash and gallantry as to twice win brevets, then through the long stretch of years and in spite of the handicap of permanent lameness from wounds received in battle, serving faithfully and efficiently in a variety of positions, and lastly, his work accomplished, retiring with the satisfaction of public recognition most justly bestowed.

The portrait accompanying this sketch is a most unusual one and has been especially selected because of its peculiar interest. It shows General McCrea, at the age of 64 years standing on the battle field of Gettysburg beside the very same gun he fought at the Bloody Angle, when he was a young man.

The family of General McCrea is fortunate in having a number of letters written by him at various times during the Civil War. Though many of them were hastily written, they are beautifully worded and are full of human interest. They show the author to have been a keen observer and a sound and logical thinker. They also show him as that high type of soldier, gallant and full of ardor, but kindhearted and considerate of others.

WILLIAM HARRY BERTSCH

No. 3408. Class of 1891.

Died, August 16, 1921, at San Francisco, California, aged 52 years.

"Billy" Bertsch was born in Michigan, January 5, 1869, and was appointed to the Military Academy in June, 1887. His classmates found him quiet, studious, lovable. His was a gentle spirit that during his cadet service made friends who never forgot him and to whom he was unflinchingly loyal.

Upon graduation he was assigned to the 15th Infantry at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, and was soon engaged in controlling the great railroad strikes that threatened Chicago in 1894. He early showed a talent for Quartermaster work and was chosen Quartermaster of his regiment, only to be later detailed and re-detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

During the Spanish-American War he was with his regiment at Puerto Principe, Cuba. In the Philippines, Captain Bertsch commanded Company M, 4th Infantry, against the Insurgents at Imus and Dasmariñas and at Talisay. Later on he was placed in charge of Water Transportation in Manila.

His Majority in 1911 took him to the 3rd Infantry at Madison Barracks, New York. He was frequently on duty with militia and at rifle matches and was a member of the Executive Committee of the National Rifle Association.

As Lieutenant Colonel, 1917, he was in charge of the Quartermaster work in the district of El Paso, Texas, while the Punitive Expedition was operating on Old Mexico.

On August 5, 1917, he received his promotion to the grade of Colonel, Quartermaster Corps, and was ordered to Washington, D. C., for duty in the office of the Quartermaster General. He had an excellent preparation for his new and responsible position. He worked quietly and expeditiously and with all there was in him. It was more than his physical strength could bear, and he suffered a stroke, July, 1918, brought about by his hard work and close attention to his office, from which stroke he never recovered. He was in the Walter Reed Hospital until the following February, when he was retired for disability in line of duty.

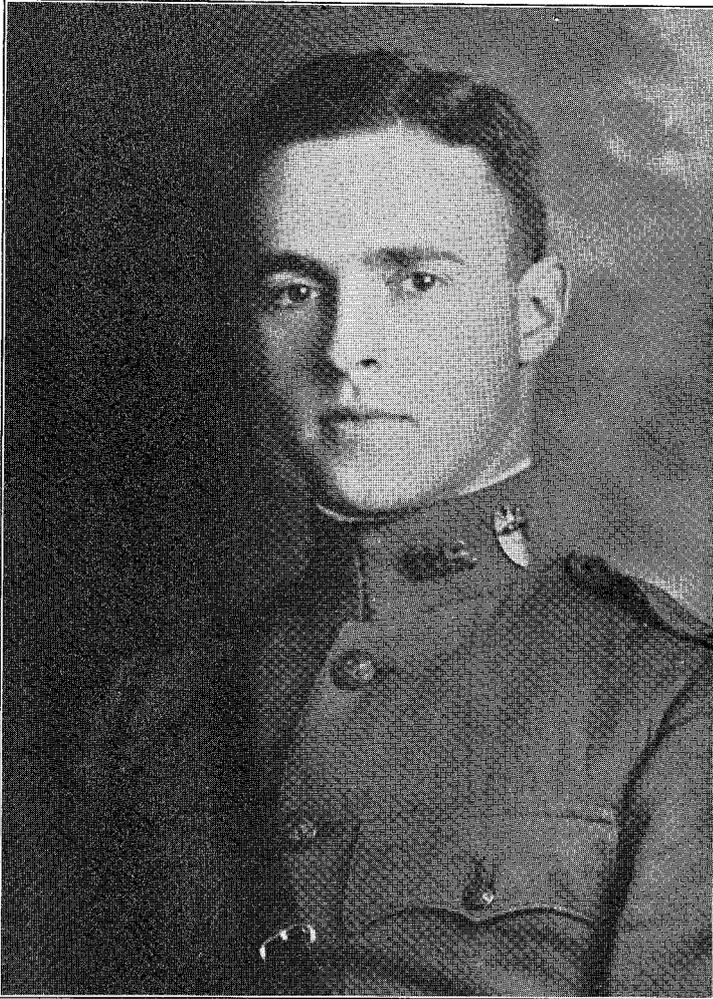

In May of 1920 he entered the Letterman General Hospital at San Francisco and remained there until his death.

Knowing his case to be hopeless, he was nevertheless cheerful to the end, thoughtful of his friends and expressed a tender loyalty to his classmates in the letters written in a trembling and failing hand. To the last he maintained that gentle smile that made him a beloved comrade. All who knew and loved him felt a tightening of the heart at the passing away of dear Billy Bertsch.

SECRETARY ASSOCIATION OF GRADUATES.

DOUGLAS ALDEN OLCOTT

No. 6398. Class of November, 1918.

Died, July 28, 1922, at Camp Knox, Kentucky, aged 23 years.

Douglas Alden Olcott, better known as Jack Olcott, was born in Brooklyn, New York, November 29, 1898. On his father's side, he was descended from Thomas Olcott, who settled in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1645, and from the famous John Alden. The name Alden his great grandmother bore until her marriage. On his mother's side he was descended from the Lynchs, who settled White Plains, New York, between 1600 and 1650, and from the McCords, who settled in Ossining at about the same period.

In 1903 the Olcotts moved from Brooklyn, New York, to Nyack, New York, and here Jack received his early education, graduating from the Nyack High School in 1916. At Nyack, where Jack spent his boyhood and grew to manhood, he made a reputation for being an excellent sailor, winning several loving cups in the boat races conducted by the Nyack Yacht Club. After graduating from High School, he won an appointment to West Point by competitive examination and the winter of 1916-17 found him at Lieutenant Braden's preparatory school at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson.

Jack entered West Point with the original Class of 1921, June 14, 1917, and graduated with that class at its early graduation, November 1, 1918. After the Armistice, he returned with this class to West Point and remained there until June 12, 1919, when he was assigned to the Field Artillery. He accompanied the class on its tour of the European battlefields during July, August and September, 1919, and on his return to the United States was assigned as a student to the Basic Field Artillery School, at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky. On his graduation from the Field Artillery School, June, 1920, he was assigned to the 7th Field Artillery at Camp Zachary Taylor, and a few weeks later became Aide de Camp to Brigadier General Dwight E. Aultman, on which duty he remained until his death. He accompanied General Aultman to Camp Dix in the fall of 1920, and while there he was considered an excellent polo player, playing with the 1921, First Division championship team, "The Free-booters". His next and last station was Camp Henry Knox, Kentucky, to which he went in the Fall of 1921. Here in the Spring of 1922 he was seriously injured in a practice polo game and confined to the Camp Hospital for many weeks. On his release from the hospital he was granted two months' sick leave. He returned to duty at Camp Knox about the middle of July and his death occurred July 28, 1922.

Jack's genial personality won for him a host of friends. He was always a good comrade, eager to do his best in all things. A hearty welcome always greeted his arrival. Brigadier General Dwight E. Aultman says of him:

"As a young officer he was highly efficient, of attractive personality, the finest type of graduate of West Point. As an aide I regarded him almost as a son, and in our official and personal relations, he was almost a member of my family, beloved by all of us. His untimely death I attribute to mental and physical suffering resulting from the terrible accident of the early Spring, when, in a collision at the polo field, he was injured to an extent that required a capital operation. We all loved him and still mourn him."

Lieutenant Olcott is survived by his father and mother, one brother and a sister.

COLONEL SAMUEL ROBERTS JONES

SAMUEL ROBERTS JONES

No. 2183. Class of 1867.

Died, September 20, 1922, at Washington, D. C., aged 77 years.

In the early part of July, 1862, Colonel Jones enrolled as a private in what later became Company E, 129th Pennsylvania Volunteers. When the company had reached its quota it proceeded to Camp Curtin at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. There was a delay of about three weeks before the company would be mustered into the U. S. service and just before that event Colonel Jones' father appeared with an appointment to West Point Military Academy, which, on the advice of the officers and men of the company, he accepted.

Colonel Jones graduated at the Military Academy in June, 1867, and was assigned as Second Lieutenant to the 4th U. S. Artillery. In this regiment he served until he became a Captain in 1891. Three months after, at the personal request of General R. N. Batchelder, then Quartermaster General, Colonel Jones transferred to the Quartermaster Department, losing three months' rank.

During his service in the Artillery, while in the Light Battery at Fort Riley, Kansas, the battery took part in the Indian Campaign in the summer of 1870 as Cavalry. During the Modoc War he was sent with a command to the Quinault Indian Reservation, Washington, to hold these Indians in check. He served through the Nez Pierce Campaign with General Howard in 1877 and commanded a company in the Bannock Campaign in 1878. He served a tour as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, 1883-1886, and declined a second tour there and one at Yale University, 1889. He was Acting Quartermaster at nearly every post at which he was stationed. He was the Regimental Quartermaster of his regiment, 1888 to 1891. He served in the Quartermaster Department from 1891 until retired "by operation of the law", February 6, 1909. During this time he was Constructing Quartermaster at Fort Riley, Kansas, 1892-1896, at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, 1894-1896, and at Fort Crook, Nebraska, 1896-1898. He was Depot Quartermaster at Omaha, Nebraska, 1896-1898.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he was promoted to Major, and Quartermaster, U. S. Volunteers, and selected as Quartermaster of the First Expedition to the Philippine Islands. There he organized the Quartermaster Department, landed the first 16,000 troops, obtained wagon trains, established Camp Dewey, and entered Manila under General T. M. Anderson, August 13, 1898. In Manila he was made Depot Quartermaster and organized a depot capable of supplying 60,000 troops.

During the Philippine Insurrection, he served as Aid to General Anderson in the field, February 4 and 5, 1899; was present at the Battle of Colocan, February 10, 1899, and at San Juan La Monte, March 7, 1899.

Returning to the United States in the Fall of 1899, he was assigned as Depot Quartermaster at Boston, but shortly after made Assistant to Chief Quartermaster, Department of the East, 1899-1903. Was Depot Quartermaster at Jeffersonville, Indiana, 1903-1904. Chief Quartermaster, Department of Gulf, 1904-1906. Chief Quartermaster, Department of Columbia, 1906-1908. Chief Quartermaster, Department of Gulf, 1908-1909. When reaching the age of 64, he was retired from active service as a Lieutenant Colonel. At the time he was retired, there were but four officers on the active list with longer service than his. Two of these were Brigadier Generals, a third would become a Brigadier General upon retirement for Civil War service, and the fourth was a classmate at the Military Academy who entered three months before Colonel Jones.

When, pursuant to the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, the President ordered the mobilization of the Army and National Guard, being in perfect health, though more than 71 years of age, he felt that his long and varied experience in the Quartermaster Department made it his duty to offer his services. They were accepted at once and on June 28, 1916, he received orders to report to Depot Quartermaster at Chicago for duty. After four months' duty there he was assigned to duty as Depot Quartermaster at Portland, Oregon, where he remained until November 1, 1918, when he was ordered to duty as Quartermaster of the United States Military Academy at West Point.

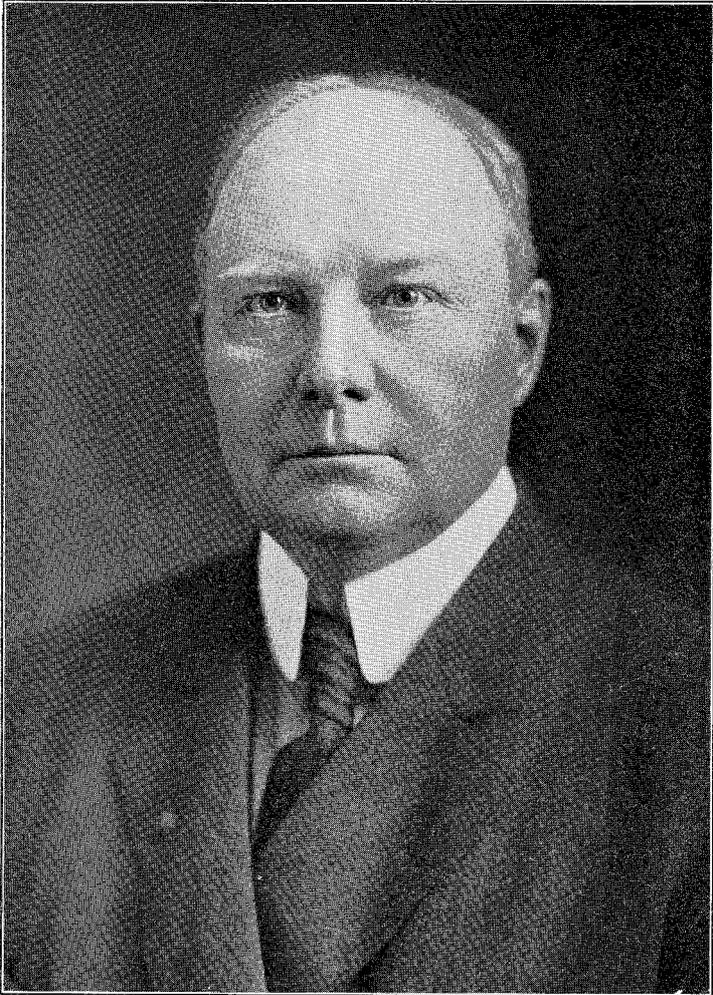

On September 1, 1918, Colonel Jones completed his 56th year of army service, and December 22, 1918, he finished his 49th year of active service. He wore three campaign badges, all for service under fire. He was 74 years of age when finally relieved from active service. When he re-entered active service he sacrificed private business that had just been placed on a paying basis.

Colonel Jones' active service covered a period only a few months short of half a century.

Mr. Poultney Bigelow, a neighbor and intimate friend of Colonel Jones, writes as follows:

"As in the case of Sir Christopher Wren, his best biographer can but point to his record of achievement. The great English architect left monuments that cheer the eye today; Colonel Jones has an official monument showing that from boyhood to a ripe old age his advancement was always at the urgent request of those above him and who needed the admirable qualities that are but rarely united in a good soldier and equally good quartermaster.

History furnishes few examples of soldiers buckling on their swords when past seventy and eagerly asking for service at the front. Blucher led his Prussians over the Rhine and occupied Paris at that age, and so did Moltke, accompanied by his King, who was also a Septagenarian. Our Winfield Scott can be included, so far as age is concerned, but no one of those mentioned surpassed Colonel Jones in physical vigor linked with executive ability.

He made his home near me during the last years of his life, and his presence on the streets of Saugerties was welcomed as bringing a blessing upon this historic Dutch town. Here he cultivated a modest farm and welcomed the many who made the pilgrimage to his fire side. He was a poor man, as are all who have devoted a lifetime to other ideals than making money. He had many rich friends, but these could not secure for themselves the social beatitudes which are purchasable only in spiritual coin.

One day his house burned to the ground. So suddenly did this happen that nothing could be saved of the many souvenirs he had gathered in the Far East. When the sun set on that bleak winter's day, he and his family had but the clothes upon their backs and the out houses. Another would have made lamentations—but the Colonel wore his usual smile of cheerful serenity. He wasted no time in making an American appendix to the book of Job, but quietly started in all over again to build him a new home, and of course he succeeded in this as in all his previous undertakings; for of him it might also be said that he could "Snatch Victory from Defeat".

Were I rich in purse I would rear a monument in Saugerties for the stimulus of patriotism in the State of New York; and on that monument should be a bronze tablet with merely the dates of his many promotions for meritorious military achievement.

God bless you, dear old Colonel,
Wherever you may be.
However great the distance,
You can't get far from me.
I've known you and I've loved you
Since our days of toil began.
Here's a bumper to you, Colonel!
You're my kind of Gentleman!

Colonel Jones was the richest man in Ulster County; his heart was of gold—and his heart knew no bounds."

PERCY PARKER

No. 2821. Class of 1879.

Died, February 7, 1923, aged 66 years.

Percy Parker was appointed to the United States Military Academy from Louisiana. A cadet from July 1, 1875, he was graduated on June 13, 1879, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of Infantry, assigned to the 8th Regiment.

He served on frontier duty during the Indian uprisings from September 30, 1879, to April 29, 1880, with headquarters at Fort McDermitt, Nevada, when he was garrisoned at Angel Island, California, until his resignation from the army on July 8, 1882.

Percy Parker was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, March 4, 1857, and died, February 7, 1923. Shortly after his resignation from the army he was married to Annie G. Butcher of Lowell, Massachusetts, where he re-established his home until shortly before his death. In addition to his widow, four children survive him: Robert B. Parker, also a graduate of the United States Military Academy of the Class of 1909, and now President of Packard, Inc., Distributors of Packard motor cars in Philadelphia; John M. G. Parker of Birmingham, Alabama; Mrs. Frederic S. Clark, Jr., of Flushing, New York, and Percy Parker, Jr., of Memphis, Tennessee.

Percy Parker lived a busy and useful life. He was an honored citizen, beloved in the community which he adorned, and his gentle, retiring disposition won for him instant and constant friendships. He was very widely known, particularly throughout New England, through the many and widespread interests with which he became identified.

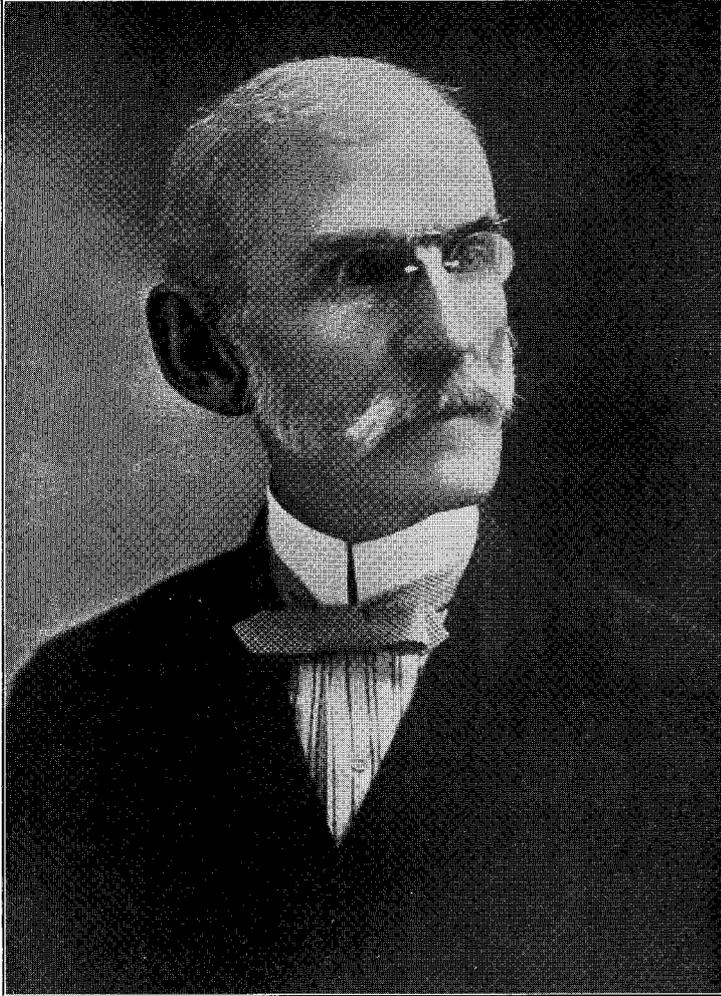

Following his resignation from the army, he became interested in the paper manufacturing business as a partner in the firm of Parker & Bassett. Along in 1885 he became actively interested in the early development of street railways in and about Lowell, Massachusetts, as Treasurer of the Lowell and Suburban Street Railway Company. From 1885 to 1899, his interests extended as a director of a number of other street railway companies in Massachusetts and New Hampshire until the consolidation of most of the street railroads of Northeastern Massachusetts, when, in 1899, he became a director of the Boston and Northern Street Railway Company and later Trustee and member of the Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Electric Companies.

Among his many other activities, Percy Parker became President of the Middlesex Safe Deposit and Trust Company, Director of the Old Lowell National Bank, Director of the Traders and Mechanics Insurance Company and Trustee of the City Institution for Savings, all of Lowell, Massachusetts; President of the American Bolt Company of Birmingham, Alabama; and President of the Columbian National Life Insurance Company of Boston, Massachusetts.

He was Assistant Quartermaster General, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of William E. Russell, Governor of Massachusetts, and Assistant Inspector General on the staff of Governor Frederic T. Greenhalge.

In addition to his membership in several clubs and social organizations, he was a member of the Loyal Legion, Sons of the Revolution, Order of Indian Wars, and various Masonic Orders.

MAJOR BENJAMIN SLOAN

BENJAMIN SLOAN

No. 1853. Class of 1860.

Died, February 19, 1923, at Biltmore, North Carolina, aged 88 years.

Benjamin Sloan was born in South Carolina, May 16, 1836. He entered the Military Academy in 1855 and graduated July 1, 1860, when he was promoted to Brevet Lieutenant of Dragoons.

He served for a short time on frontier duty in New Mexico, but resigned from the army March 2, 1861, and cast his lot with the Confederacy. Upon the close of the war he engaged for a short time in work as a civil engineer.

In 1876 he became Professor of Mathematics at the Agricultural College of Mississippi and began a long and useful career as an educator. Going to the University of South Carolina in 1880, he was Professor of Mathematics and Civil Engineering there from 1880 to 1887, and then Professor of Physics until 1902. From 1902 until 1908 he was President of the University of South Carolina. This university conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. In 1908 he withdrew from the university and retired to private life, residing near Biltmore, North Carolina.

At his death in 1923 the university faculty published the appreciation and resolutions given below:

"The faculty heard with deep regret on February 19, 1923, of the death, at his home in Biltmore, North Carolina, of Major Benjamin Sloan, some time president of this university.

After a man has passed over 80 years, many in the midst of storm and stress, his friends can scarcely expect to have him much longer with them, but when President Sloan, as was his wont, visited Columbia, his old home, last Christmas, while not as robust as before, his greeting was as cordial, his gentle humor as winning, his interest in the state and the university as intense, his patriotism as ardent as in the old days. His former colleagues, some of whom had been his students, dared hope surely for one lustrum more of his useful, beneficent life.

In 120 years the university has had various types of president: one a materialist-philosopher; one, who had won the applause of listening senates; one a noted American humorist; several theologians, some of them militant, some exemplifying the quiet dignity of a life consecrated to knowledge; three or four profound scholars; some men of affairs; three who had served in the Confederate armies; but only one of them all a trained soldier. Major Sloan's education at West Point and subsequent career in the armies of the United States and the Confederate States never made him a martinet. He instituted and enforced discipline on this campus, but always with justice, moderation and magnanimity, and many a student listening to his friendly but determined personal admonitions realized as never before that the bravest are the tenderest.

When the centennial of the opening of the college was celebrated in 1905, Dr. James Woodrow, a former president, publicly addressing Major Sloan, said, 'My gratification is intense that I can, at the end of the first century of the South Carolina college and the beginning of the second, find its destinies presided over by so worthy a president.'

On the same notable occasion the late Dr. Edward S. Joynes, in presenting a portrait of President Sloan to the (then) college in behalf of the alumni, said: "As he was in the beginning such he has ever been and now is---the same simple-hearted, high souled, duty-loving and duty-doing man, who by his very modesty and self-effacement has won the confidence of all, and at last has received those honors which in vain he has tried to escape. To win high honors is a noble meed of life, to have deserved them is nobler still. To have won them unsought by long and arduous service is the highest test of merit."

Your committee would adopt unreservedly as its own Dr. Joynes's eminently judicious tribute to his colleague and friend:

Therefore, be it Resolved, That the Faculty of the University of South Carolina have heard with deep and tender regret of the death of Major Benjamin Sloan, for twenty-two years professor and for six years acting president and president of the college and the university.

That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes and published in the daily papers, and that a copy thereof be sent, together with the every assurance of sympathy, to the sister and nieces of President Sloan."

GEORGE WASHINGTON BURR

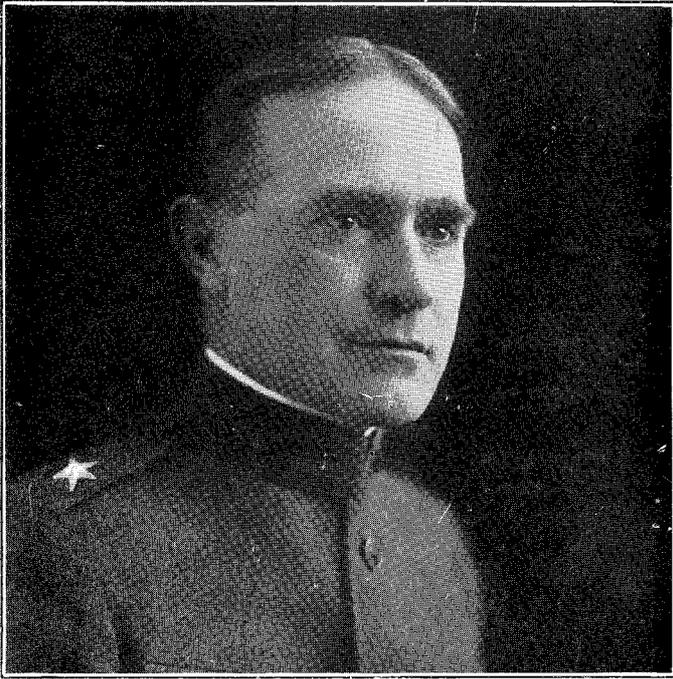

No. 3241. Class of 1888.

Died, March 4, 1923, at Washington, D. C., aged 57 years.

Brigadier General George Washington Burr, Ordnance Department, on duty as Assistant to the Chief of Ordnance, died on March 4, 1923, at his residence, The Mendota, Washington, D. C.

General Burr was born in Illinois, December 3, 1865, and was appointed to the United States Military Academy from Missouri, June 15, 1884, being graduated number four in the Class of 1888. He was assigned to duty as Second Lieutenant, 1st Artillery, June 11, 1888, and served in garrison with that regiment at the Presidio of San Francisco for several years. In 1891 he was transferred to Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, and later served as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi until July 7, 1893. He was appointed First Lieutenant in the Ordnance Department, January 10, 1893, after competitive examination, and served as a subordinate officer at the Allegheny Arsenal, Rock Island Arsenal, Watervliet Arsenal and Sandy Hook Proving Ground until September, 1902. He was promoted to Captain, Ordnance Department, April 7, 1899.

During this period he was actively connected with the design, development and tests which led to the adoption of the new type of Field Artillery materiel, the 3-inch long recoil gun carriage, model of 1902, and developed its manufacture while stationed at the Rock Island Arsenal. When he relinquished this work, this materiel had been in service for a number of years as the standard Field Artillery materiel of the army, and so remained until the outbreak of the recent war.

He was promoted Major of Ordnance, June 25, 1906. He served as commanding officer of the Manila Arsenal and as Chief Ordnance Officer, Philippines Division, from 1907 to 1910, being in charge of the Philippine Armament District as well as a member of the Fortifications Board, Philippine Islands, during this period. Upon completion of his tour of foreign service, he was assigned to duty as commanding officer of the Augusta Arsenal, Augusta, Georgia, in 1910. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, Ordnance Department, in 1910, and was ordered to duty as commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal in 1911, where he remained in command until February, 1918. He was promoted Colonel, Ordnance Department, in 1916.

During Colonel Burr's incumbency of the command of the Rock Island Arsenal the Ordnance Department was installing in its establishments various features of what is known as the Taylor system of scientific management of industrial plants. At that time organized labor was suspicious of this system and opposed its introduction, even in the initial stages which had nothing to do with wages or the efforts which workmen were called upon to make, but concerned systematization and orderly procedure only. The Rock Island Arsenal is in a region where labor unionism was very highly developed, and labor was in a position to make strong use of the political power which any organization of voters possesses in a country of popular government. The membership of the unions was inclined to think that in a country where all citizens are politically equal they should be industrially equal as well, and that schemes for stimulating output, or for regulating compensation in accordance therewith, should have no place in an industrial establishment, and certainly not in one which was conducted by the Government. The commanding officer was thus in a position in which failure to forward the new system would bring discredit upon the efficiency and economy of operation of his arsenal, while an unreasoning insistence and a refusal to patiently explain the features of the system would have risked an expensive disturbance in the labor force and a turbulent appeal to members of Congress, such as these gentlemen, naturally, find it difficult to ignore. In these delicate circumstances Colonel Burr's tact and judgment did not fail him, and he carried out the scheme of improvement at his arsenal without break in the continuity of the work, and with no further friction than that which always attends keen discussion of a disputed subject. The leaders of organized labor in the United States now express different views in regard to payment in accordance with output from those which industrial management had to contend with a dozen years ago.

When war was declared he was still in command of the Rock Island Arsenal. He had anticipated the necessity for the large expansion of that arsenal and had been very active in securing the necessary appropriations for new construction, so that, upon the outbreak of the war, there was already in process and well advanced a Field Artillery ammunition factory, a Field Artillery vehicle factory, and a large storage plant, all of permanent type. He had also negotiated the purchase of approximately 15,000 acres of ground at Savanna, Illinois, and had initiated the construction of the Savanna Proving Ground. These construction projects involved the expenditure of approximately $12,000,000. During his administration of the Rock Island Arsenal in the early months of the war, the working force at that establishment was increased from about 2,500 employees to approximately 13,000. As this Ordnance establishment was the largest in the United States for the manufacture and issue of Ordnance material, being practically the only source of supply for personal and horse equipment and mobile artillery equipment, his work there was an important factor in the expeditious outfitting of our troops.

In February, 1918, he was sent abroad to join the American Expeditionary Forces, and assigned to duty as Chief Ordnance Officer in England with station in London on the staff of Major General Biddle. During this tour of duty, which lasted seven months, he represented the Ordnance Department in large purchases from the British Government of heavy artillery, artillery ammunition, and other supplies so vital to the success of our Expeditionary Forces. This duty required many visits to the larger manufacturing plants in England and Scotland, and a thorough knowledge of and familiarity with their methods and capacities. His energetic prosecution of these procurement activities unquestionably contributed very materially to the successful operations of our combatant divisions on the western front. While on this duty he was appointed Brigadier General, Ordnance Department, August 8, 1918.

In October, 1918, he was recalled from abroad to take over the Engineering Division of the Ordnance Department in Washington and had been on that duty only a short time when the Armistice was signed. In December, 1918, he was detailed for duty on the General Staff, and appointed Assistant Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, and upon the retirement of Major General George W. Goethals to civil life, General Burr succeeded him as Assistant Chief of Staff, Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, with the rank of Major General, on March 5, 1919, and continued in that position until relieved at his own request, September 1, 1920.

General Burr's broad experience during the preceding ten years in connection with the procurement and manufacture of army supplies on a large scale had admirably fitted him for the tremendous task of carrying out the demobilization work in so far as it affected supply, transportation, settlement of war contracts, disposition of stores, etc. In this capacity he was a member of the War Department Claims Board from its establishment, February 20, 1919, until August 31, 1920. He was also the War Department member of the Interdepartmental Board of the Council of National Defense, from November 1, 1919, the date of its establishment, until he relinquished his duties as Assistant Chief of Staff on August 31, 1920.

Upon his relief from duty as Assistant Chief of Staff and Director of the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division of the General Staff, General Burr was sent abroad on a special mission as the personal representative of the Secretary of War to negotiate final settlement of all outstanding War Department business with certain foreign governments. He was abroad on this mission from September 7 to December 8, 1920, and negotiated the important Burr-Niemeyer Agreement by which all outstanding U. S. War Department business with the English Government was finally settled. He also successfully negotiated certain settlements with the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

He was appointed Brigadier General, Assistant to the Chief of Ordnance, for a period of four years in 1920, and upon his return to the United States, in December, was assigned to duty in Washington as Chief of Field Service of the Ordnance Department, charged with all questions of storage, supply and maintenance of Ordnance materiel, in which capacity he was serving at the time of his death.

General Burr was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for his exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service in connection with the demobilization of supply and industry consequent upon the termination of the war, and the War Department business in connection therewith. He was awarded the decoration of Companion of the Bath by the British Government for his services in England and France during the World War, and the Order of the Crown by the Roumanian Government.

TIEMANN NEWALL HORN

No. 3393. Class of 1891.

Died, May 5, 1923, at Honolulu, Hawaii, aged 55 years.

Appointed to the Military Academy in June, 1887, Cadet Horn, T. N., was a handsome athletic youngster, jolly and full of enthusiasm. It was inevitable that his classmates should seize upon the opportunity offered by his initials to dub him Tin Horn, by which cognomen he has been affectionately known in the service ever since.

Tin Horn of '91 was always cheerful, full of energy, and active in all class affairs to the point that made him unusually popular. He was prominent in all athletics and a member of the first Academy football team. He carried his love of outdoor sports throughout all his subsequent army service, was an ardent horseman, played on many service football teams, and developed into a golfer of such skill that he won many cups and tournaments. It was while playing golf at the Oahu Country Club, Honolulu, that he dropped dead of heart disease.

Graduating number nine in his class at the Academy, he was assigned to the 3rd Cavalry, but in December of the same year transferred to the 2nd Artillery. In this latter branch he put 32 years of devoted work and hard study, with the result that he won diplomas from the Artillery School, the School of Submarine Defense, and the Army School of the Line, graduating from the last named with honors. Added to this was his service in the Philippine Islands and Hawaii. He was thus well equipped for the grade of Brigadier General, to which he was advanced soon after the United States entered the World War.

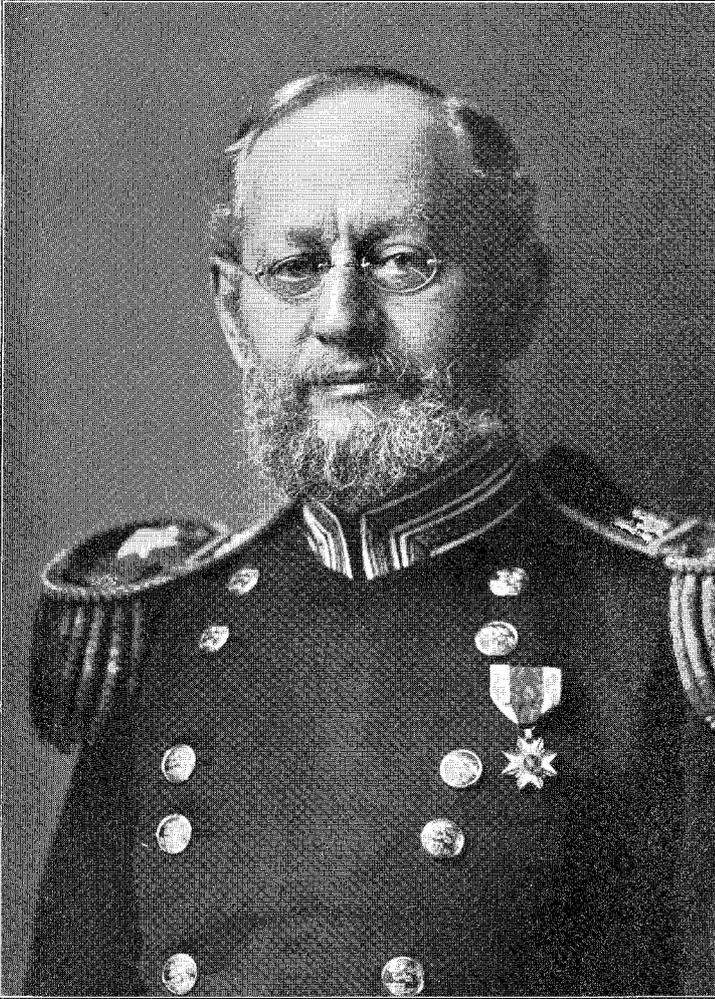

At Camp Wheeler, Georgia, he trained the 7th Field Artillery Brigade and took it to France in August, 1918, where he saw active service with the 7th Division in front of Metz, going on into Germany later with the American forces.

Returning from foreign service in May, 1919, he was appointed Chief of Demobilization at Camp Bowie, Texas. Upon completion of that duty he was assigned command of the 82nd Field Artillery at Fort Bliss, Texas, and finally rounded out his ambitions by graduating from the Army Staff College at Washington, D. C., 1920, with the first class selected to enter that institution after its post-war reorganization. He was serving in Hawaii at the time of his death.

In 1894 he was united in marriage with Miss Myra Rivers of Pulaski, Tennessee. She and little daughter Frances were accidentally drowned in Long Island Sound in 1902. In 1917 he married Mrs. Isabel Howell Clinton, daughter of Colonel D. L. Howell, U. S. A. She survives him with their daughter, Adah Howell Horn, and one son by his first marriage, Lieutenant Tyree Rivers Horn, U. S. A.

Tiemann Horn never lost his youthful energy or enthusiasm. Sorrows and disappointments could not break him, he rose above them and ever retained his zest for life and his keen interest in the service to which he remained so loyal. To his many friends the news of his sudden death came as a stunning blow.

CLASSMATE.

BRIGADIER GENERAL HENRY MARTYN ROBERT

HENRY MARTYN ROBERT

No. 1763. Class of 1857.

Died, May 11, 1923, at Horning, New York, aged 86 years.

Few men are allotted so many years of usefulness and few, if any, have left a more splendid record of loyal service, earnest endeavor and substantial accomplishment than General Henry M. Robert. Upon his graduation from the U. S. Military Academy at the age of 20 years he was assigned to the Corps of Engineers, in which he served 44 years until his retirement, as Chief of Engineers, on May 2, 1901. Neither his intellect nor his energy diminished in consequence of his retirement for age and for the next 14 years he continued the active practice of engineering as consulting engineer. During his early service he became interested in parliamentary procedure, and with his customary zeal and thoroughness he set out to master a subject upon which little had been written at that time. He soon became and remains today the acknowledged authority on the subject of parliamentary rules and practice. The closing years of his life were devoted to writings on this subject.

General Robert was born at Robertsville, Beaufort District, South Carolina, May 2, 1837. He was appointed to the Military Academy from Ohio and was graduated number four in the Class of 1857. After a short service as instructor at West Point, he was sent in 1858 with a detachment of troops to take part in operations against Indians in Oregon and Washington. While on this duty, the Canadian boundary dispute with Great Britain became acute and in anticipation of war General Robert, then a Second Lieutenant, was put in charge of fortifying the Island of San Juan in Puget Sound. He also made several explorations for the location of wagon roads and trails in the Northwest before being ordered East just prior to the outbreak of the Civil War.

His action at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the North and the South was characteristic of the man. He always weighed every question very carefully and with the greatest consideration for all parties concerned, but, having made his decision, followed it out to its logical conclusion without regard to its effect on him personally. When the question arose as to whether he should go with the South or stay with the Union Army, he analyzed it and decided that he owed his first allegiance to his State, but that his allegiance should be to what he considered the real interest of the State rather than to the action of the authorities at the time. He decided that he would do whatever he considered best for the State of South Carolina. He then considered the question of secession and came to the conclusion that the State had a right to secede. He then addressed himself as to the wisdom of such a course, and after careful consideration came to the conclusion that it would be unwise, as he felt that if the South were successful the states forming the Confederacy would have equal right to secede from the Confederacy if its action at any later time were not in conformity with the views of the authorities of the State. He felt that if this policy were carried to its logical conclusion we should eventually have in this country a large number of independent states, each maintaining its frontier posts, troops and other attributes which would develop a feeling of hostility and eventually result to the disadvantage of his State as well as to all others. He decided to remain with the Union Army.

At the beginning of hostilities, Lieutenant Robert was placed in charge of the construction of a portion of the defenses of the City of Washington, a project then engaging the serious attention of the administration. He was, however, still suffering from the effects of a tropical fever contracted while crossing the Isthmus of Panama and because of the tremendous strain under which he was obliged to work during that stirring period his health gave way. He was transferred to Philadelphia and later to New Bedford, Massachusetts, in charge of defenses of those places, remaining on this duty to the close of the war.

During the two years following the war, General Robert was again on duty at West Point as Instructor in Practical Military Engineering and as Treasurer of the Military Academy.

He was promoted to Major in 1867, and his active service from that date until his retirement was spent on river and harbor improvement and fortification construction with the exception of two years, 1890-91, when he served as Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia. This service of about 34 years took him to all parts of the United States. As officer in charge of construction, as Division Engineer, and as a member of various boards of Engineers reporting on projects, General Robert was connected in some degree with most of the major river and harbor improvements and fortification projects undertaken by the United States during his time. His thorough knowledge of the engineering problems involved in the improvement of the harbor at Galveston made him a logical choice of that city, after his retirement from active service, when it became necessary to retain consulting engineers to design some means of protection against disastrous tidal waves such as the one which swept the city in 1900. Thus he was a member of a board of engineers whose studies and recommendations resulted in the sea wall which has successfully protected the city since its construction, and of another board to design the highway and railroad bridge two miles long connecting Galveston with the mainland. He was repeatedly consulted in an individual capacity by the City of Galveston and was also retained by the Mexican Government in 1911 to design the improvements to the mouth of the Grijalva River and of the harbor of the Frontera.

While General Robert was essentially an engineer and attained eminence in his profession, he was also a scientific thinker along other lines. As before mentioned his publications on parliamentary rules and practice have become widely distributed and are now the recognized authoritative works on this subject.

A small incident awakened General Robert's interest in this subject. When about 25 years old he was unexpectedly called upon to preside at a church meeting in which there was much controversy. He knew nothing of parliamentary procedure at the time. The meeting was acrimonious and accomplished nothing. General Robert while presiding determined to take up the study of parliamentary procedure. He obtained a copy of a current manual on this subject and the rules adopted by the houses of Congress. He felt that these rules were fragmentary, were not always based on fundamental concepts and sometimes led to absurdities which defeated their purpose. As the result of his studies he evolved certain basic principles and wrote a small pamphlet for the use of friends and himself in conducting the work of charitable and civic organizations.

In 1876 he published Robert's Rules of Order. This book was immediately accepted by all parliamentary critics and authorities and by 1914 sales had totaled 500,000 copies. In 1915, Rules of Order, Revised, was published. The revision represented three years' work. There were no fundamental changes, but the text was classified and rearranged for easier reference. In 1922, or about one year before his death, General Robert, after five years of constant application completed his treatise called Parliamentary Law, a book of some 700 pages.

General Robert was a member of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, Association for the Advancement of the Sciences, American Academy of Political and Social Science and the National Geographic Society.

General Robert was always extremely considerate of those under him, and felt that the best results were to be had by the most thorough co-operation. This was illustrated by his action when division engineer. He preferred, when possible, to be in a position to approve the recommendations of his district engineers. When his views differed from theirs it was his custom, when time permitted, to take the matter up again personally and informally with the district engineer and discuss the case thoroughly with him in the hope that he and the district engineer would arrive at the same conclusion and that it would be possible for the district engineer so to write his report that General Robert could forward it with a simple recommendation for approval.

He was probably one of the most efficient presiding officers any Board of Engineers has ever known. Boards of which he was President generally submitted reports and recommendations in which all of the members of the Board concurred. It was his practice, when the Board was acting, if he found the members apparently unable to agree, to take the position that, as they were all earnest, honest, educated and equipped with logical minds, the points of difference were apt to be due to different understandings of the premises. He would have the premises enunciated and if they were not agreed upon then would stay on this point until the Board agreed as to what the premises were, what problem was to be solved, what considerations entered into it and what the value of each of these matters was quantitatively. Having arrived at an agreement on these points a unanimous conclusion naturally followed rapidly.

His staunch loyalty during the last years of his active service was characteristic of the man. He was passed over when his predecessor, an able and accomplished officer who graduated several years after him, was appointed Chief of his Corps. Colonel Robert, however, continued in the harness and worked to the utmost limit of his ability daily throughout the next four years. His services were of inestimable value to the Chief of his Corps and to the work on which he was engaged for the country. This highest possible type of service was recognized by his chief, who retired voluntarily a few months before his own retirement for age became compulsory in order that Colonel Robert might be promoted to the grade of Chief of Engineers.

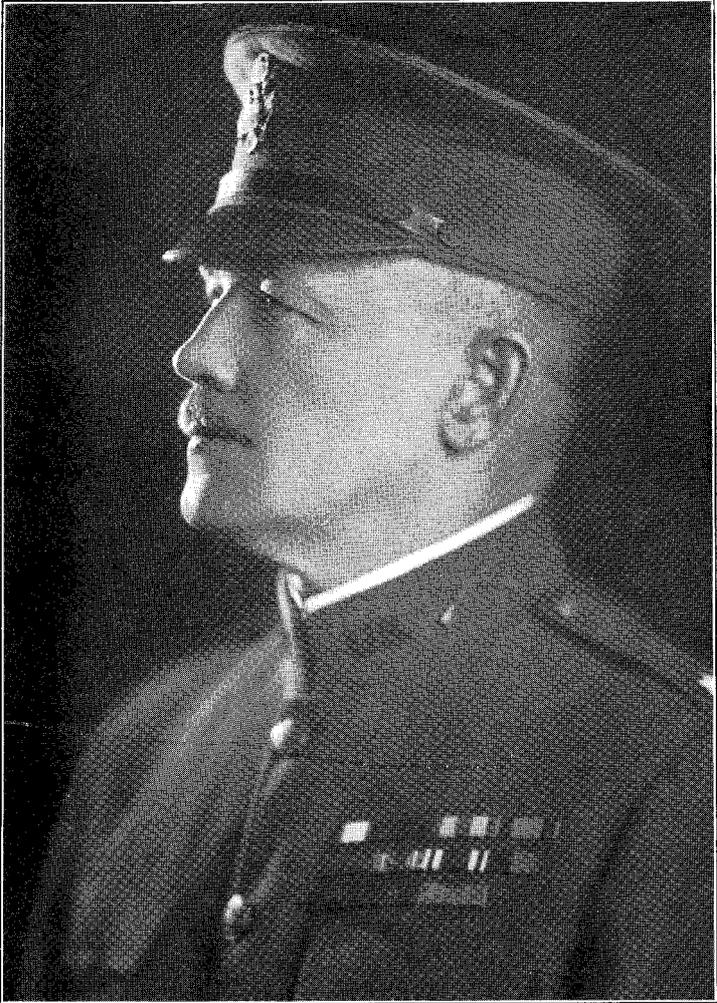

He was married twice and is survived by his second wife, who was Miss Isabel L. Hoagland of Owego, New York, and by the following children: Mrs. Luigi d'Auria, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Mrs. D. C. Redgrave, Cambridge, Massachusetts, widow of Commander D. C. Redgrave, U. S. N.; Professor Henry M. Robert, Jr., Department of Mathematics, U. S. N. A.; Mrs. Clarence Vernon Fowler, wife of Professor Clarence Vernon Fowler, Department of Modern Languages, U. S. N. A. The interment of General Robert was at Arlington, May 14, with full military honors. E. J.

SYDNEY A. CLOMAN

No. 3321. Class of 1889.

Died, May 12, 1923, at Burlingame, California, aged 56 years.

The official record of Lieutenant Colonel Sydney A. Cloman is one of opportunity and of accomplishment, but it is one of succeeding opportunity because it is one of successive accomplishment.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL SYDNEY AMOS CLOMAN

In 1890-91 he took part in the campaign against the Sioux in South Dakota. As a Major U. S. Volunteers, in 1898, he sailed to the Philippines on the first expedition and remained until 1901. In 1903 he was appointed a member of the General Staff upon its organization, a selection which to all those who knew him seemed quite a matter of course. Then came an interesting mission to Venezuela, Colombia and Panama, followed by an assignment as Military Attaché and Observer with the Russian Army in Manchuria in 1904-5 during the Russo-Japanese War. In 1907 he was appointed Military Attaché to the United States Embassy at London, which gave him his opportunity for seeing the Turkish Counter Revolution of 1910 and, on a mission, of visiting Liberia and Sierra Leone.

His service in London over, he was placed in command of the Guard at the Panama-Pacific Exposition of 1912-14 in San Francisco and was appointed the War Department representative to it. This took him to Australia, New Zealand and the Malay States as a member of a commission. Garrison duty followed to his resignation in January, 1917, as a Major of Infantry.

Upon the entrance of the United States in the World War, he returned to the army as a Lieutenant Colonel. After organizing and commanding the 159th Depot Brigade, he served in the St. Mihiel campaign as an Assistant Chief of Staff of the 1st Corps, and during the campaign in the Argonne, and the Heights of the Meuse he was Chief of Staff of the 29th Division. With the Armistice he was assigned as Assistant Finance Officer, Member of the Board of Contracts and Adjustments, and Chief of the Administrative Liaison Bureau until May, 1919, when he returned to the United States and, at his own request, was placed on the retired list as a Lieutenant Colonel.

He received the Distinguished Service Medal, the Croix de Guerre, the Order of St. Michael and St. George, the Order of Stanislaus of Russia, the Order of Danilo of Montenegro and was an officer of the Legion of Honor.

This is the official record, but no official record gives, or can give, the human quality of the officer.

Cadets at West Point make pretty shrewd forecasts of the future of a comrade, and I think that we of his class all realized those qualities which made Cloman's career what it was. Then, as always, he was a manly man who did things easily and who, without effort, was the life of every gathering. Then, as afterwards, he showed himself one of those fortunate men who, when the last official paper is filed, when the decorations have been put away in their little red boxes, not to be worn again, still live and remain part of the very existence of their friends. His were everyone whom he met and they were many, of different conditions and races, for he had a very genius for friendship. As long as the men who knew him live he is not really dead. Gone, as on a journey perhaps, but when they meet their talk inevitably drifts toward him as though they felt a door might open and the room be suddenly made gay by his very presence.

Few men told a story as well as he and his life was full of the material for good stories. The quality of them is preserved in his "Myself and a few Moros", which was originally intended for a small private circulation, but which was so good that, after being published serially, it was successfully issued in book form. In reading it a man who knew him can almost hear his voice and, without trying, he has made the most authentic picture which exists of our life in the Philippines from 1898 to 1902 or so. It was a most improbable adventure, although, like all such, it did not seem improbable until it was all over. No official reports can give the spirit of it, but he has caught it, the spirit of youth and hardihood which carried us gaily through that fantastic episode in the history of the United States, an adventure lived adventurously and lived merrily.

That does not mean we did not do good work. We did, and no one did better work than Cloman, but neither he nor the rest of us took ourselves too seriously. That is probably why we did as well as we did. We did not consider obstacles, we did not much ponder over the numerous ways a thing cannot be done and we worked gaily. Thinking of the time, of the life of Manila in the early days, one sees Cloman again, good with men, good at a desk, good at a card table, and always with his inexhaustible gift of laughter.

He was a happy man, happy in his power of swift and efficient work, in his wide and varied interests, in his marriage, in his friends, of which he had so many, and in his very death for he was spared old age.

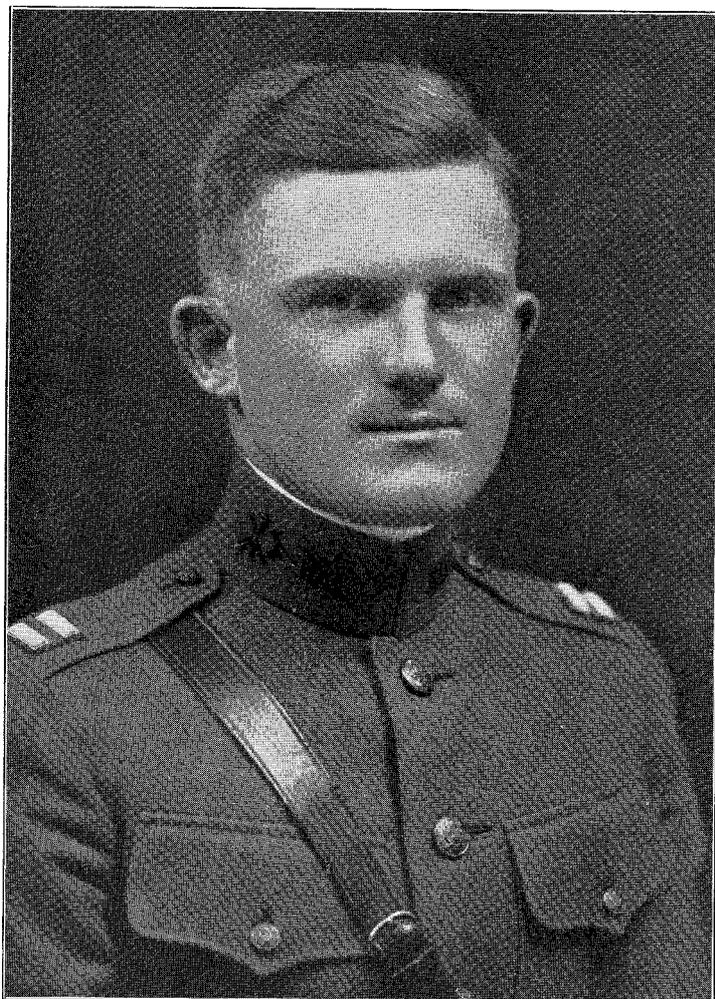

JOHN R. M. TAYLOR.

JOSIAH FURMAN MORFORD

No. 5676. Class of 1917.

Died, at Camp Vail, New Jersey, on June 8, 1923, aged 29 years.

Josiah Furman Morford was born at McMinnville, Tennessee, on October 13, 1894, the only son of John Josiah Morford and Sallie Hayden Morford, and was the last of a sturdy American family which numbered among its members some eminently successful and patriotic men. The family was established at McMinnville, Tennessee, by his great grandfather, Josiah Furman Morford, a Princeton graduate and a lawyer of considerable note. His father and his grandfather were both successful and he was bidding fair to follow in their footsteps. His father was noted for his patriotic efforts during the war.

CAPTAIN JOSIAH FURMAN MORFORD

In his early childhood Furman, as he was called at home, was an active and precipitate youngster, although obedient and lovable. His name Furman became a synonym for all that is bright, happy and lovable. As a youngster he showed a practical piety that was a satisfaction to parents and teachers alike.

As an older boy he became readily attracted to all the healthy outdoor sports and activities. Before he was twenty he had made all the hills for miles around as familiar to his footsteps as was his own door yard. Woodlore was a fascinating pastime for him. He hunted every wood and hill, he trapped in every valley, and fished every stream or lake of the country side. He was fond of horses and dogs, was an excellent rider as a boy and always owned a favorite collie, who was a constant companion in his outdoor wanderings. He had each year his own individual flower garden which he tended himself, taking a special delight in raising pansies.

With all his outdoor activities he was not less enthusiastic about the more intellectual accomplishments. He was always proficient at his studies and was an excellent player of the violin, being a member of the high school orchestra. Following his high school education he went to the Military Academy at Columbia, Tennessee, whence he was graduated.

He was appointed to the Military Academy at West Point by his district Congressman, Moon, of Tennessee. In preparation he attended the Wertz Preparatory School at Annapolis, Maryland.

From June, 1913, to April, 1917, he was at West Point as a cadet, except for the brief summer furlough in 1915, when he visited his home after his three years away at school. Although a cadet then and a trifle more serious than before, he was still the same cheerful and amiable dispositioned boy, considerate and generous to a fault. At West Point his light sandy hair soon procured for him the name of "Strawberry", and so his classmates dubbed him. Conversation during the leisure moments always took a cheerful vein when Strawberry was in the crowd. His kindly sympathy was extended to every friend or classmate upon whom some misfortune might have fallen; and his cheery smile with a word of encouragement always brightened the atmosphere.

Even the somewhat sombre subject of astronomy took on a spirit of animation and live interest, and the old observatory began to appear less musty when Strawberry Morford turned, by way of recreation, to the calculation of the transit of stars upon calm summer nights during first class camp. His proficiency at astronomy and his easy familiarity with the intricate looking old instruments in the observatory earned for Strawberry a new sobriquet, that of "Doctor Brashear". He was, however, by no means a book worm, nor was he at all sedentary in habits. His mental recreation came only after a full day of active pursuits, including boating on the river and polo on the flats.

Graduation from West Point in the troubled days of 1917 placed him as a Second Lieutenant in the 11th Cavalry. He was at that time fired with the ambition to be over where the war was being fought. He became interested in everything connected with the war and the American entry into it with the same lively enthusiasm that animated all of his activities. He was much disappointed at not getting across to Europe early and even his customary cheery conversation was at times clouded by this disappointment. He had chosen the cavalry as his branch of the service not only because of his great love of horses, but because he expected to see the closing phase of the war vitally affected by the action of the cavalry. He confidently looked to the participation of American cavalry in the deciding actions. He had often maintained this belief in discussions of the war among his classmates just before graduation from West Point.

A month after graduation he reported for duty as a new Second Lieutenant in the 11th Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, where he served during those trying days of the summer of 1917 when every officer of the army was asking, "When shall I be going across?" Lieutenant Morford was as enthusiastic as any, but much to his disappointment he was required to serve in the United States during the greater part of the war period. He was promoted to First Lieutenant, May 15, 1917, and to the grade of Captain on August 5th of the same year. Engaged in training troops for war service, he served at Norfolk, Virginia, and at Fort Myer, Virginia, until in March, 1918, when he was appointed Regimental Supply Officer of the 11th Cavalry. He was finally sent overseas in June, 1919, for duty with the General Sales Agent in Paris, but he returned to the United States in December, 1919. Being then detailed to the Signal Corps, he went to the Signal Corps School at Camp Vail, New Jersey, where he served both as a student officer and in the executive office of the camp. While there he met Miss Helen Smith of Long Branch, New Jersey, whom he married on August 22, 1922. He remained at Camp Vail as Assistant Executive Officer until his unexpected death, which occurred on June 8, 1923. He died suddenly while apparently in good health and to all his friends and relatives the news of it came as a great shock. He was so universally and genuinely loved and admired that his passing has left a place in the hearts of all that can never be completely filled. His cheerfulness has remained after him and his familiar figure will long be remembered as he was daily seen riding around the camp on his pet mount whose speed carried him to many a victory at polo. He was a splendid horseman, taking especial delight in playing polo, and his true spirit of high sportsmanship won for him a place of high esteem in the hearts of all who knew him.

HERBERT SYDNEY WHIPPLE

Herbert Sydney Whipple was born in Norristown, Pennsylvania, July 16, 1861, the son of Major General William Denison Whipple and Caroline Mary Cooke Whipple. After his graduation from the United States Military Academy in 1885 he was assigned to the 10th Cavalry and saw service in the Indian country during the eighties. He was promoted First Lieutenant of Cavalry, March 27, 1892. In the Spanish-American War he became Lieutenant Colonel of the 2nd Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. He was detailed as an Acting Inspector General and also in the Pay Department, April 23, 1901, to April 22, 1905, and was stationed in Cuba and in the Philippines. Captain of Cavalry, July 10, 1900, in 1905 he was retired for disability in the line of duty. After the entry of the United States into the World War he served in the Quartermaster Corps and later at the Disciplinary Barracks on Governor's Island. At the time of his death he had been for some years Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the College of the City of New York. He was buried at Arlington, June 15th, 1923.

Whipple was distinguished by his charm, by his sympathetic and cordial manner and manners. His career outside the service, due to his early retirement, necessarily cut him off from contact with his fellows, but his classmates and others will not soon forget the traits that marked him out so favorably from the first.

He held the affection of all who knew him, not only in the Regular Service, but also in the National Guard of New Jersey.

L.

IVENS JONES

No. 4884. Class of 1910.

Died, September 7, 1923, at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, aged 37 years.

Ivens Jones, son of the late Colonel Samuel Roberts Jones and Hannah Whitelaw Jones, was born February 15, 1886, at Mt. Vernon, Iowa. He attended St. Luke's Academy at Philadelphia, then the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, from which institution he graduated before entering West Point with the Class of 1910.

As a cadet, this active, lovable man was known as a hopoid and spoonoid, took a large part in athletics, captained a lacrosse team, received his "A" in basketball, was doubles champion in tennis paired with Bev. Dunn, ran the mile, and was one of the polo squad. He also sang in the choir. Very early he aspired to military greatness, he is credited with having uttered as a plebe, "My furlough for a corp.;" he got the corp and the furlough, too.

The scribes of the 1910 Howitzer say that he was absent minded, to prove which an incident of him as section marcher was cited—"having hung his spectacles on the Phil. Dept. hat rack, he entered the section room hat in hand and reported—Cadet Jones is absent. Sir." It may have been that he was overly mathy and was absorbed with Newton's theory.

For a tactical error in handling some matter pertaining to boodle in yearling camp he acquired his title "Boodle Bill".

Upon graduation from the Military Academy in 1910 he was assigned to the Field Artillery and first served with Battery "D" 5th Field Artillery, at Fort Snelling. In January, 1912, he was ordered to the 1st Field Artillery in the Philippines and in 1913 went with the regiment to Honolulu, where he served until 1916. A short tour on the Mexican border fell to his lot in 1916, then in August, same year, came a detail to West Point, in the Department of Mathematics. He began as an instructor of plebe math. and became associate professor. During the recesses in academic work he did duty at the Field Artillery School, Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

In 1922 Colonel Echols wrote of Ivens' work in his department: "Major Jones' record in mathematics (as a cadet) was highly satisfactory, so much so that he was called back to the Academy in 1916 as an instructor in the Department of Mathematics. Major Jones served for three years, teaching fourth and third class mathematics. During the last year he became associate professor and supervised the more advanced instruction as well as conducted the instructor's conferences. His work as a teacher was most efficient."

In the spring of 1919 he was ordered to Europe to attend the Field Artillery School at Treves. This was followed by duty at Berne as Assistant Military Attaché, from October, 1919, until 1921, and as Military Attaché until the office was closed in 1922.

Upon his return to the United States he sojourned for a few weeks in Washington and then was assigned to the organized reserves, 337th Field Artillery, 88th Division, with station in Minneapolis. This was his last duty, for Ivens came to his untimely death from injuries received in a polo game at Fort Snelling. He died September 7, 1923, and was buried with full military honors in the Lakewood Cemetery in Minneapolis.

Ivens married Ellen Lewis Nye of St. Paul on November 6, 1911. To them were born twin daughters, Betty Washington and Eleanor Nye. His wife and daughters survive him, also his three sisters, Mrs. John Hanner, Mrs. William S. Browning, and Miss Katharine Jones.

Testimonials of Ivens' way of carrying on are contained in the following extracts of letters:

Major E. L. Gruber, F. A., wrote in 1922 from Eaglesmer Park, Pa.:

"I have known Major Ivens Jones for many years, during which time I have closely observed his work in the service not only under me but also under others. In all these capacities his work has been characterized by thoroughness, broad vision, devotion to duty, loyalty to his superiors, and good will to his comrades.

Major Jones has the knack of making friends and, what is more important, of working harmoniously with his co-workers.

During the war he served under me and rendered service which was as excellent as it was self-sacrificing."

Ivens' secretary, while in Berne, writes of him in these words:

"One gets to know a man pretty well working with him month after month, and I have never worked for one who was finer in every way."

Mr. Joseph C. Grew, American Minister to Switzerland, wrote to Mrs. Jones: "He was one of the most sympathetic colleagues I have ever worked with and his sunny outlook on life endeared him to us all. A man like your husband enriched the community where he lived and the people with whom he came in contact by his splendid ideals, his high spirit, and the sweetness of his nature. I am deeply grieved by the loss of such a friend."

Colonel C. Arthur Lyman, 337th Field Artillery, tells of the regard which the reserves had for him: "No words can express the deep regret which every member of the 337th Field Artillery feels over the loss of Major Jones. Those of us who knew him best considered him not only an unusually fine officer, but also a very delightful friend and associate."

General Pershing noted Ivens' death and wrote to Mrs. Jones:

"I wish to express to you for the officers of the War Department and for myself personally our deep sympathy in the death of Major Jones. Throughout his service, which included the period of the World War, he exhibited that ability, loyalty and unselfish devotion to duty that distinguishes the best type of military officer."

Ivens was an officer of the soundest type—imbued with the best tradition of the service, always scrupulous, honorable, and alive to his duties to his family, his friends, and the country, and it was with deepest regret that we learned that he had gone on to join Benny Havens and the rest.

Mrs. Ruth L. Ramsay of St. Paul, a friend, dedicated these verses to him:

I see you with your children, hand in hand,
Stalking out across the marshy land
To find the nesting birds.

I see you with your friends at meat,
Eyes ablaze, jump to your feet
And sling out keen, conviction driven words.

I see you skiing down an Alpine steep,
I see you crouch to take the final leap,
Risking your life by youth and daring spurred.

I knew they could not keep you captive there
Though they shoveled earth upon the wooden box
And laid the flowers with care.

JAMES KENRICK WHETTON

No. 6872. Class of 1922.

Died, September 29, 1923, at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, aged 24 years.

James Kenrick Whetton, or "Ken", as the Corps knew him, was born December 24, 1898, at Needham Heights, Massachusetts, of an old New England family. His early education was gained at the Avery School and Needham High School, where his record as class president for four years, business manager of the school paper and all around athlete marked him above his classmates as one for whom the future held much.

Graduating from high school he entered Dartmouth College in 1917, where he joined the Kappa Sigma fraternity. Little can be said of that year as college circles were engulfed in the maelstrom of war. Ken was caught in that rising tide and heeded the call of his country by entering West Point in November of 1918. The armistice came before he could prove himself in battle.

When Congress decreed the return to the four-year course at the Military Academy, West Point was lucky to have such men as Whetton to aid in the reforging of the corps.

He was among the older men in his class. His council was sought and heeded. His service on the Vigilance Committee was notable for above all his sense of justice and honor was his predominating characteristic. He was naturally bright, classes bothered him little and the tortuous path of academics he lightly trod. He played football as a yearling, but his lack of weight prevented him from continuing at the game. He managed the hockey team and was an expert shot with the rifle and pistol.

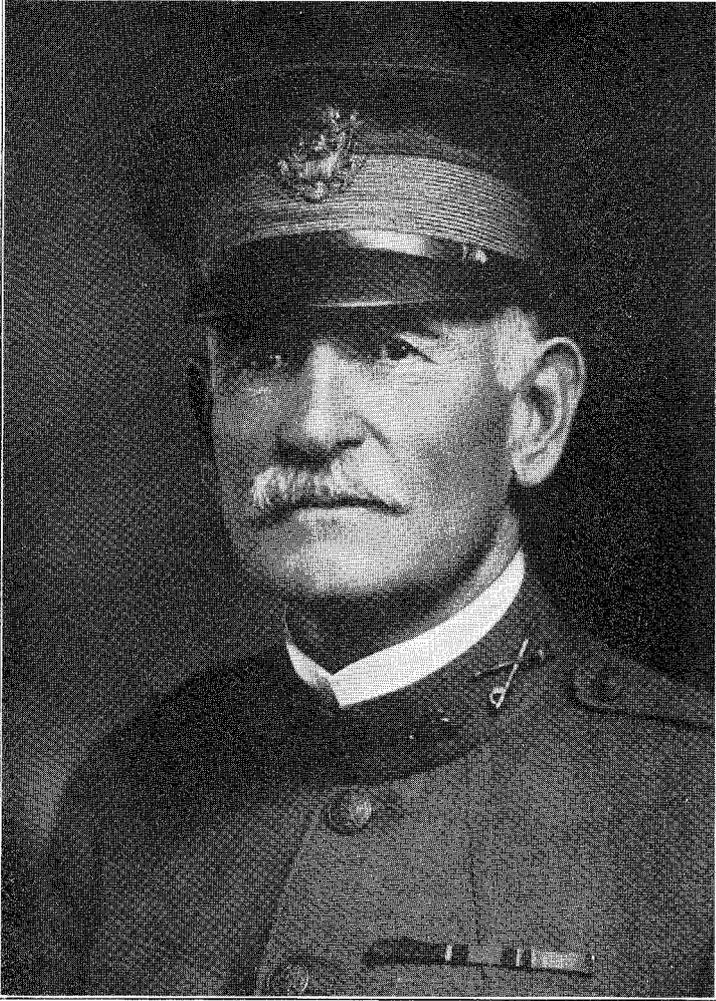

Whetton graduated in the Field Artillery and reported to Battery E of the 12th F. A. at Camp Travis, Texas, in September, 1922. This was the first West Point class since the war to go direct to troops after graduation.

Along with the rest Ken had his troubles. He signed one too many notes for the men in his battery. Like the others, he had to learn the mechanics of the firing battery, including grooming by detail, but by the time spring maneuvers came he could shoot shrapnel like a veteran and led his battalion officers in competitive firing. The men in his battery swore by him, recognizing, as soldiers do, these inherent qualities of an officer and gentleman that he so well exemplified.

In addition to regimental football, Whetton took up polo. While engaged in a game against the 15th F. A., Sunday, September 29, 1923, his pony fell and rolled over him, crushing his skull at the base of the brain. Death was almost immediate.

LIEUTENANT JAMES KENDRICK WHETTON

COLONEL JOSEPH GARRARD

His passing took from the army one of its most promising young officers. Few that met him but were impressed with the depth and sincerity of his nature, his ability and his clean manliness. He was one of the best loved in the Class of 1922 and we unite in honoring the memory of the first to answer the last long bugle call.

In April, 1907, he organized the first School of Musketry under Lieutenant General MacArthur and remained on this duty for two and a half terms, until relieved at his own request in order that he might take command of the 15th Cavalry, he having been promoted to Colonel of that regiment, April 20, 1907.

Joining his regiment, December 22, 1907, at Cienfuegos, Cuba, he served in command of it during the period of the Cuban Pacification until its return to the United States in February, 1909. During this time he was a member of the Fremont Court of Inquiry and was in charge of combined target practice of machine gun platoons, Army of Cuban Pacification, at Camaguey, Cuba, in 1908.

Upon his return to the United States in February, 1909, he took station at Fort Myer, Virginia, where he commanded his regiment and post until 1913. His duties in command of this important post adjacent to the capital were many and various. He continued his keen interest in rifle and pistol practice, selected a site and installed a large range near Edsall, Virginia, about ten miles from Fort Myer, assisted in the testing of Lewis Machine Gun and Colt forty-five automatic, and served as director representing the United States Cavalry at the national competitions at Camp Perry.

He worked hard to promote horsemanship in his command, organized courses of instruction, encouraged the younger officers to secure good horses and compete in shows and tests, and held exhibition rides and drills during the fall and winter months that were attended by thousands of visitors.

It was while he was in command that the Wright Brothers made their historic flights at Fort Myer. The whole world was interested and the crowds attending were very large. The trying duty of guarding and policing the grounds during this time fell to Colonel Garrard and the 15th Cavalry, and it was most ably performed.

In November, 1913, the 15th Cavalry was ordered to duty on the Texas Border and Colonel Garrard soon found himself at El Paso commanding a regiment of which the troops were scattered at various posts along the border for a considerable distance. Very shortly thereafter Villa captured Jaurez opposite El Paso and Orizaba opposite Presidio, driving many refugees across the line to become rather troublesome charges of the United States. The 15th Cavalry performed its duties well, kept up its drills and target practice, and maintained its high standing as a regiment.

On April 29, 1914, Colonel Garrard was retired under the provisions of Section 1244, R. S., he having reached the age of 62 years. This early retirement came as a sad blow to Colonel Garrard and was the result of an unfortunate incident that occurred during the time he was commanding officer at Fort Myer. His honest expression of disapproval on the application for commission of a candidate whom he esteemed unworthy, was taken up, distorted into an expression of race prejudice, and made a political issue. The friends of Colonel Garrard always felt that he was very unjustly treated.

After retirement he served for a time as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the high schools of El Paso, Texas, and for two years during the World War as Commandant of the United States Disciplinary Barracks, Alcatraz Island, California.

He was a member of the Union League and Bohemian Clubs of San Francisco, and is survived by his wife and by his two daughters, Valeria, LeC., who married Major Ziba L. Drollinger, Infantry, U. S. A., and Lucy Lees, who married Major Victor S. Foster, Cavalry, U. S. Army.

PETER LEE ATHERTON DYE

No. 6007. Class of June, 1918.

Died, February 15, 1924, at Denver, Colorado, aged 27 years.

On October 4, 1895, Peter Lee Atherton Dye was born at Ather-tonville, Kentucky.

He was appointed to the Military Academy from Kentucky and entered in June, 1915. At that time he was already known to, and well thought of by, those of his classmates with whom he had previously studied at the Columbia Preparatory School in Washington, D. C.

"Pete" was the fortunate and happy possessor of many excellent personal qualities. The outstanding characteristics of that charming personality, so dear to his friends, were his great frankness, unswerving loyalty, and his gift of warm-hearted friendship. His genial and gay spirit served often to lighten the troubles of his many friends; his sympathy and thoughtfulness could always be depended upon. To try and write a picture of so staunch a friend is but to prove the emptiness of words.

The Class of 1919 was graduated in June, 1918, a year in advance of schedule. We of that class well knew that our early graduation was due to the fact that the World War, then still being waged, demanded our services, and we were enthusiastic and anxious for action.

It was therefore particularly disappointing to Pete, who had spent his life preparing himself for the military service, to learn by his first orders received as a commissioned officer that he was to report to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, as a student officer. However, his ready smile and cheery disposition were in no way lacking during the days of strenuous war training that followed.

On graduation he had been commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the 12th Cavalry, which regiment he joined at Columbus, New Mexico, in the Fall of 1918 after having completed his duties at Fort Sill and after having received his commission as a temporary First Lieutenant in July of the same year.

He served further with his regiment at Camp Shannon, New Mexico, and at Del Rio, Texas. He was commissioned a First Lieutenant (permanent grade) on October 26, 1919, and shortly afterward, in December, 1920, was ordered to report to Culver Military Academy, Culver, Indiana, as Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics. It was while stationed there that he contracted influenza, which later developed into tuberculosis. In March, 1922, he was sent to the General Hospital, Fort Sheridan, Illinois, and later to the Fitzsimmons General Hospital, Denver, Colorado. He was retired in December, 1922, and died at Fitzsimmons General Hospital from the continued effects of his illness on February 15, 1924.

During his long illness his spirit remained undaunted, optimistic and cheerful. His memory will ever be a beacon to his comrades to light their ways in years to come whenever their thoughts turn to the man that was and the spirit that is: "Peter Lee Atherton Dye".

"Nor knowest thou what argument
Thy life, to thy neighbors' creed has lent."

SECRETARY, ASSOCIATION OF GRADUATES.

HORATIO GATES GIBSON

No. 1347. Class of 1847.

Died, April 17, 1924, at Washington, D. C., aged 97 years.

To West Point, cradle of warriors, Brigadier General Horatio Gates Gibson, oldest graduate of the United States Military Academy at the time of his death, and sole surviving officer of the Mexican War, made his final journey on April 22, 1924.

Fighter, philosopher, and philanthropist—he was there buried with highest military honors. America's most distinguished sons did honor to his passing, and war heroes of three generations paid tribute at his burial. A great man, a courteous and honorable gentleman, and a faithful friend.

In Baltimore, quiet little village that it was in those days, General Gibson was born on May 22, 1827, the son of the Reverend John and Elizabeth Jameson Gibson, and scion of an old Revolutionary War family. With a boy's love of battle-glory, after-school-hours in York, Pennsylvania, and vacation days of his early youth were filled with war-games, fighting of imaginary Indians, and re-waging the battles of three-quarters of a century before in which his great grandfather—whose memory was his greatest pride—had distinguished himself. And in these playtime hours, the boy Gates shaped his future.

June 13, 1843, was the day when his child dreams came true, for on that morning, as a slim, undersized boy of 16, he walked up the long hill overlooking the Hudson to enter the United States Military Academy. With him on that little journey were two other youths, destined to glory in the war between the States, Ambrose E. Burnside and Romeyne B. Ayres.

Graduation of the Class of 1843 was taking place on that day and the youngsters looked with envy on the newly-made Second Lieutenants. One of the graduates he met, a stocky, black-haired lad, whom he was to meet again many years later—was Ulysses S. Grant.

Four years later, as Brevet Second Lieutenant, he received his first detail to Vera Cruz, Mexico, with the 3rd Artillery. During the Mexican Campaign, Lieutenant Gibson saw little active fighting, but was included in the forces that entered Mexico City at the end of the war. On September 8, 1847, he was commissioned as Second Lieutenant.

Sent to California in 1849 at the time of the gold rush, the young officer encountered difficulties when the greater part of his command succumbed to the lure of gold and deserted. With even the camp cook away, all the duties of the camp fell upon the shoulders of the few that remained faithful. Lieutenant Gibson often lent a hand in preparing the meals for the day.

Slow days followed, but adventure lay not far along the path. In 1851, as First Lieutenant, he was sent on an expedition against the Coquille Indians of Oregon. A sharp battle took place on the Coquille River in which the Indians were dispersed and pursued by Gibson's detachment. During the chase, a keen-eyed Corporal espied through the branches of a tree a pair of dangling brown legs. Summoning aid, he investigated, and found there a redskin boy of the Coquille tribe. They took him prisoner, keeping him for four days, and finally allowing him to escape at such a point that they knew he would find his way back to the tribe.

Four years later Gibson again met the Indian boy, then grown, playing the role of a desperate young chief—Captain Jack. It was in an engagement with the forces of Captain Jack that Gibson received his first bullet wound. In his memoirs he wrote:

"I saw the smoke of a rifle arise from the crotch of a tree a little way up the ascent and felt something penetrate my right leg. The surgeon quickly ripped the clothing apart and pronounced my wound a 'beautiful one', which diagnosis somewhat reconciled me to my ill-fortune."

In 1858 he was engaged in the battle of Spokane Plain, and two years later in the Battle of Pyramid Lake, while with the Carson Valley Expedition.

With the outbreak of the Civil War, Gibson was commissioned as Captain of the 3rd Artillery and ordered to assist in the defense of Washington. With the Army of the Potomac he saw service in the Peninsular Campaign of Virginia, in the Siege of Yorktown, and the Battle of Antietam. In all three of those engagements Gibson won glory for himself, but the outstanding feat of his Civil War career took place at the Battle of Williamsburg.

Ordered to defend a certain strategic corner of a forest, Captain Gibson brought his guns into the desired position and commenced a scathing fire upon the enemy, only to find after a few moments that the ground assigned to him was a bog, and that his pieces were rapidly sinking into the soft mud. Undaunted, however, he continued the fire, wreaking havoc in the opposing line of gray, and despite the fact that he was heavily outnumbered held his ground for several hours, until orders came to withdraw. In his retreat he managed to save all but one of the guns, although 17 of the horses, used to haul the artillery, had been killed in the action.

For this "gallant and meritorious service" he was made Brevet Major on May 5, 1862.

For the following months he assisted General Stoneman in guarding the rear of the Army of the Potomac, until September 14, 1862, when he and his command took part in the Battle of Stone Mountain.

During the Battle of Fredericksburg came one of the narrowest escapes from death that Gibson ever experienced. In a letter home, written on the night of the occurrence, he said:

"While the battle was raging I had been talking to General Franklin and turned away to ask General Bayard to have some lunch with me. He had answered, 'Well, I believe I will', when I felt a shock across my back, followed by a rushing sound and a thud, which stunned me. I turned and poor Bayard lay prostrate at my feet. I stepped to his assistance and, on lifting him, found that he was mortally wounded, his thigh having been shot away. The shot went through my coat and carried away my sabre, cutting the slings at my waist-belt. Poor fellow, he was to have been married tomorrow."

After distinguishing himself at Shepherdstown and Rappahannock, Virginia, he was made Chief of the Heavy Artillery in the Army of the Ohio, April 20, 1863. Later the same year he was commissioned Colonel of the 2nd Ohio Heavy Artillery. With this rank he was engaged throughout the remainder of the war in defending the railroads of Kentucky and Tennessee and in constructing Forts McPherson and Sedgwick.

Upon being mustered out of Volunteer service in August, 1865, his status reverted to his old rank of Captain of the 3rd Artillery. Soon afterwards he was made Major, later Lieutenant Colonel, and finally, in 1883, Colonel.

Thereafter he served as commanding officer of various posts throughout the East. On June 5, 1885, he was ordered to Washington Barracks, Washington, D. C., where he remained until his retirement in 1891.

In 1898, with the declaration of war against Spain, General Gibson volunteered his services in defense of his country, but was not accepted owing to his advanced years.

In 1904, by Act of Congress, he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General, retired, which title he held until his death.

Quiet, waning years followed the retirement of General Gibson from the active service, during which time his main interests were centered about the Aztec Club of America, of which he was president for many years. The Aztec Club is composed of veterans of the Mexican War.

In 1913, however, the service to which he had dedicated his life did him honor in a most unusual way. In official orders from the Department of War he was informed that he had been reinstated in the active service and was thereby ordered to report to West Point, New York, on July 1, at which time he was to deliver the graduating address at the Academy. On July 3 he returned to the retired list.

Once more, in 1917, on the sixtieth anniversary of his own graduation, he returned to the Point, to hand a diploma to his grandson, Walker Gibson White.

General Gibson was a staunch advocate of an early entrance in the World War, and took much interest in the activities of the American forces. Modern warfare, however, conducted on stereotyped formulae of destruction seemed to him to lack the glory and romance of that in which he had spent his life. On March 16, 1863, General Gibson was married to Mrs. Harriet Leavenworth Atkinson, the daughter of Major Benjamin Walker, of the Class of 1819, West Point Military Academy. They had four children, Dr. Horatio Gates Gibson, Mrs. Katherine Gibson White, Mrs. George Weed Wallace and Captain Henry Kendrick Gibson. Captain Gibson was in the Aviation Corps during the World War.

Thus ends the story of Horatio Gates Gibson, Brigadier General, United States Army. "The old order passeth", and with the passing of such men the world loses a precious possession which she can never regain. His were the days of splendid rugged men who underwent the hardships of an untried country, and who bravely and cheerfully contended with the forces of nature in remote posts and with the unfriendly tribes that it was their portion to encounter. His was a life of more than usual usefulness and power. He fought and conquered. "The battle is to be strong."

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND.

ALEXANDER McCARRELL PATCH

No. 2706. Class of 1877.

Died, April 20, 1924, at Lebanon, Pennsylvania, aged 69 years.

He was born September 16, 1854, at Claysville, Pennsylvania. His parents were William Elsie Patch and Annie Eliza Clemens.

The boy's early education was obtained in the public schools of Claysville and at Cannonsburg Academy, Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania.

After attending those schools he obtained a teacher's certificate and taught for two sessions in the public schools of Washington County, Pennsylvania.

In the summer of 1873 he reported at West Point, New York, for examination, was successful and entered the United States Military Academy.

At that time Patch was about 5 feet 11 inches in height and weighed about 155 pounds. His complexion was pale, his eyes and hair very dark and his arms were unusually long.

His first room-mate at the Academy was named Parsons a Mississippian.

When the Class of 1877 was about to go into "Third Class Camp" for the summer of 1874, Patch suggested to the writer of this article that they tent together, in order to avoid almost certain necessity of having to tent with some others who were considered by us as rather undesirable.

At the end of camp we agreed to room together in barracks during our third class year. After that we continued to tent and room together till our graduation in 1877.

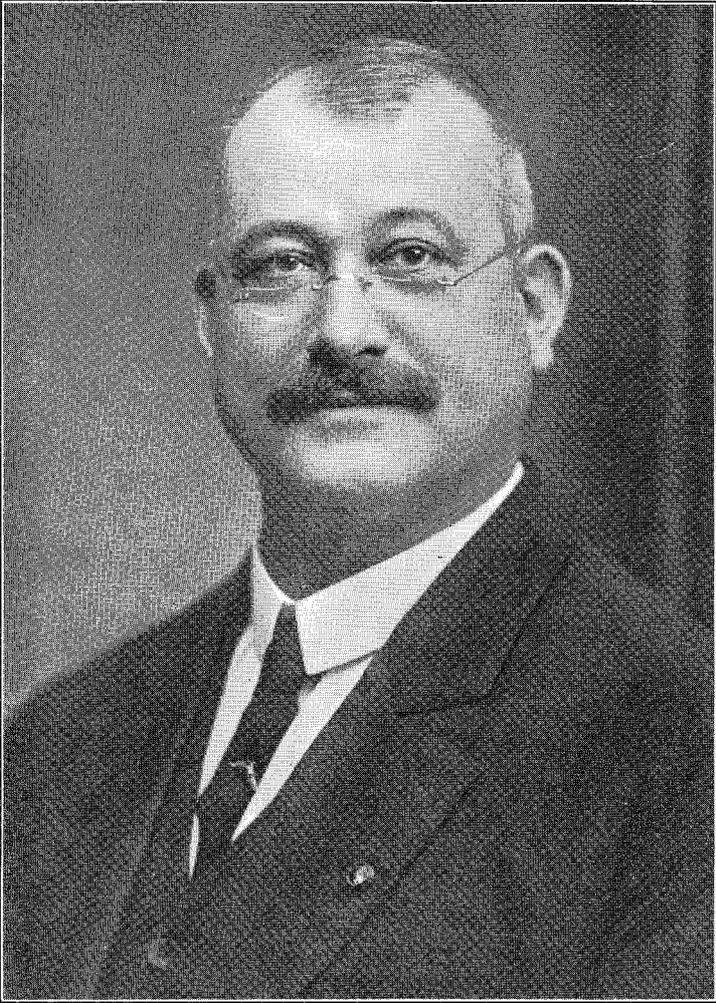

That year, Congress having neglected to appropriate for the pay of the army, the graduates from the Military Academy reported for duty after the meeting of the new Congress.

Patch's first commission was an Additional Second Lieutenant, 8th Cavalry, June 15, 1877. His first station was Fort Brown, Texas, where he remained only a few weeks when he was appointed to fill a vacancy in the 4th Cavalry, then stationed in the old Indian Territory, now Oklahoma.

Patch's troop (Captain Wirt Davis) was stationed at Fort Sill, Indian Territory, when he had the misfortune to lose one leg.

With a detachment of his troop and one or more Indian scouts he was sent out to the eastward of Fort Sill to capture some outlaws from various states, then in hiding in the Indian Territory.

After a long march he made a fast ride to surround the hiding places of several outlaws, one after another, his horse being a very fast animal and hard to control.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER McCARRELL PATCH

When approaching the last cabin one of the Indian scouts passed the Lieutenant, at the same instant giving a war whoop, at the very instant the struggle between horse and rider was hardest.

The yell of the Commanche warrior gave Patch's horse the strength to overcome all control, and Patch was soon thrown against a tree and one ankle badly broken.

Patch was taken back to Sill, his crushed foot amputated, and several months afterwards, in January, 1880, he went to Washington, D. C., to get his first artificial leg from the Government.

At the old Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., we occupied the same room and the same bed for a week or ten days. We found in Washington various classmates and other friends.

After getting his artificial leg Patch went back to duty with the 4th Cavalry, his Colonel being Ranald S. Mackenzie, whose name was then an inspiration to young officers who desired to do their duty.

Patch was promoted to First Lieutenant, 4th Cavalry, May 5, 1880.

Evidently he was a most excellent officer, for he was a Post Quartermaster and even Regimental Quartermaster for several years. This, for a man with one leg and serving under some very exacting commanding officers, speaks volumes for Patch's efficiency.

He was retired as Captain, March 9, 1891, for disability contracted in line of duty.

When retired he was serving at Fort Huachuca, Arizona.

In December, 1885, Patch was married to Annie Moore, the daughter of the Congressman who had appointed him to the Military Academy.

After retirement he remained for a while at Fort Huachuca in business with the post trader.

Returning to Pennsylvania, he owned and operated a general merchandise store at Cornwall, Pennsylvania, until 1898, when he was made Treasurer of the Cornwall Railroad.

Two years later he was made Secretary and Treasurer, and a year later he was promoted to Superintendent. In 1905 Patch was elected President and remained in that office until his death.

He died at his home in Lebanon, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1924, having lost his wife November 22, 1915.

Patch's misfortune when a young Second Lieutenant was a great loss to the army and to his country.

He had attracted most favorable attention from General Mackenzie and he would, no doubt, have continued his excellent service.

His success in civil life was wonderful and showed great ability of a kind seldom seen in an army officer after retirement.

In disposition Patch was open as the day, generous and fearless, a warm hearted friend, and he had no enemy.

He had the kind of courage needed in a commander of a forlorn hope and by the commander of the rear guard of a badly defeated and retreating army.

He left the following children: Major Joseph Dorst Patch, Major A. M. Patch, Jr., Lida Wint Patch (Mrs. Philip Gordon), William Moore Patch.

WALTER HENRY GORDON

No. 3148. Class of 1886.

Died, April 26, 1924, at Washington, D. C., aged 61 years.

Major General Walter Henry Gordon was born June 24, 1863, at Artonish, Mississippi. His father was a native of Georgia who had moved to Mississippi as a young man, and his mother a native of New York. Shortly after the war between the States, General Gordon's father bought a plantation in Louisiana and the family moved to that State, where General Gordon spent most of his boyhood and young manhood. While attending school in Virginia, General Gordon received an appointment to the United States Military Academy, from Louisiana, and entered with his class July 1, 1882.

On graduation from West Point, in 1886, General Gordon, with a number of his classmates, among whom was the class president, then Second Lieutenant Pershing of the Cavalry, was sent to the frontier posts of the unsettled Northwest. Lieutenant Gordon was assigned to the 12th Infantry and reported for duty at Fort Yates, North Dakota. For more than three years he led the life of a junior officer in this rough frontier post, helping to preserve peace among the turbulent Sioux, then led by such men as Sitting Bull, Rain-in-the-face, John Grass, Gaul and other warlike chiefs. In 1891, after a year's course in the Army School of Submarine Mining, he was graduated, and shortly afterwards promoted to First Lieutenant of Infantry.

During the World's Columbian Exposition, at Chicago, Lieutenant Gordon commanded the picked detachment on duty at the exposition. Tours of garrison duty at Fort Bliss and Fort Sam Houston, and two details as Professor of Military Science and Tactics, first at Louisiana State University, and later at Delaware College, completed his service prior to the Spanish-American War.

The Spanish-American War found Lieutenant Gordon married and stationed at Delaware University. His bride was Laura Doan, daughter of an old St. Louis family. With the organization of the

MAJOR GENERAL WALTER HENRY GORDON

1st Delaware Infantry, Lieutenant Gordon became Major Gordon, of the U. S. Volunteers, and later was promoted to the command of the regiment, as its Colonel. The regiment was mustered out in November, 1898, and Lieutenant Gordon was assigned to his old regiment, the 18th Infantry, and joined that regiment in the Philippine Islands, where it was engaged in the suppression of the insurrection then under way.

Shortly after his arrival in the Philippines, Lieutenant Gordon received his Captaincy and began the organization of the Mounted Scouts, famous in the army as the Gordon Scouts, so called after their leader.

The history of this organization is a glorious one, but one filled with the utmost hardship and the most severe campaigning. For months the command was engaged in the pursuit of the insurrecto, Quintin Salas, through the swamps of the Island of Panay. This pursuit finally ended in the annihilation of the outlaw's forces and the surrender of their leader. How well the Gordon Scouts succeeded is shown in the following citation given Captain Gordon by Brigadier General R. P. Hughes, then commanding the American forces in Panay,

"for skill and ability in operations against the command of Quintin Salas, in the Dumagas Nanglares, Island of Panay, which resulted in the annihilation of the command and the final surrender of its leader,"

Captain Gordon was twice recommended for brevet promotion to the grade of Lieutenant Colonel.

Captain Gordon was a member of the General Staff from November, 1907, to April 11, 1909. He was promoted to Major of Infantry, March 23, 1909. Major Gordon served in the Inspector General's Department from April 2, 1910, to August 14, 1913, and from October 11, 1919, to July 15, 1920. On August 15, 1913, he entered the Army War College, graduating in June, 1914. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel of Infantry on September 13, 1914. On July 1, 1916, he was promoted to rank of Colonel, and was assigned to organize and command the 31st Infantry.

The declaration of war with Germany found Colonel Gordon in the Philippines, and shortly afterwards he was sent to the important command of the American forces in China, at Tientsin. On August 31, 1917, he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General and assigned to the command of the 154th Depot Brigade, at Camp Meade, Maryland. On December 29, 1917, he was assigned to the command of the 10th Brigade of the 5th Division, then being organized at Camp Forrest, Georgia. He trained this brigade in the United States and early in 1918 took it to France where, on the 17th of August, 1918, he planned and led the first attack of the 5th Division at Frapelle. In recognition of his success in this attack, on August 26, 1918, he was promoted to the rank of Major General and assigned to the command of the 6th Division, A. E. F., which he commanded in the Vosges and in the Meuse-Argonne, and in the Army of Occupation, in Germany, following the Armistice. In June, 1919, General Gordon brought his division home. He then reverted to his rank as Colonel and was assigned to the command of the 21st Infantry at Fort George Wright, Washington.

On July 3, 1920, Colonel Gordon was promoted to the grade of Brigadier General in the regular service and assigned as commandant, the Infantry School, at then Camp Benning, Georgia. There, for three discouraging years, he was in command, and it is to General Gordon, more than to any other officer, that the Infantry School owes its present success. In addition to his duties at Fort Benning, General Gordon was in temporary command of the 4th Corps Area, and divided his time between corps headquarters and his own station. On November 7, 1923, General Gordon was appointed Major General and ordered to duty in the Office of the Chief of Staff.

He was retired from the active list of the Regular Army at his own request, after more than forty years' service, on January 18, 1924. On April 26, 1924, while alighting from a street car in Washington, he dropped dead from heart disease. He was buried a few days later in the Arlington National Cemetery.

The high regard in which General Gordon was held by his colleagues of the army is shown by the following recommendation for promotion signed by General Pershing:

"I recommend that from the list then submitted the following be specially considered; this for the best interests of the service, as the records of the officers named, together with the experience they have had in the World's War, render them particularly qualified to fill the more important positions in our own army. I consider it especially desirable that they be given at this time the grade for which they have been recommended in order that their services may be available in building up the new units.

General Pershing testifies further to the character and attainments of General Gordon in the following letter:

"My friendship with General Gordon began on July 1, 1882, when, as members of the Class of 1886, we entered the Military Academy at West Point together. As a cadet, as well as throughout his army career, General Gordon impressed his associates with his lovable, sympathetic and earnest traits of character—qualities which he possessed to a marked degree.

General Gordon went to France in command of the 10th Brigade, 5th Division. While the division was occupying the St. Die sector, General Gordon was placed in direct command of an operation to capture the Village of Frapelle in the Fave River Valley about St. Die. The operation was brilliantly carried out by the 6th Infantry on August 17, 1918, in accordance with General Gordon's plan. By this action a dangerous salient was wiped out and the town of Frapelle and Hill 451 were taken.

On August 26, 1918, as a result of his demonstrated ability, General Gordon was assigned to the command of the 6th Division, which had just arrived from the United States. He retained his command until after the Armistice, and the division at all times by its splendid courage and morale reflected the fine qualities of its commander."

JOHN J. PERSHING.

Major General Charles S. Farnsworth, Chief of Infantry, writes of General Gordon, as follows:

"Reflecting on forty years' acquaintance with Walter H. Gordon brings to mind a cadet, modest, courteous, kindly, soldierly, loyal to ideals—qualities which remained with him to the end.

In all the many responsible positions he held his outstanding characteristic was a willingness to subordinate his personal advancement to the advancement of the organization assigned to his command and to the cause for which that organization was formed. This enabled him to be ambitious for the advancement of his command without engendering hostility against the command or suspicion as to his impelling motives or their resulting rewards.

This unselfishness permitted him a loyalty, to superiors and subordinates, to family and strangers, such as is seldom seen either in public or private life.

In each grade of military rank he was given positions of responsibility—from a Lieutenant acting as Regimental and Post Quartermaster to a Major General commanding a division in battle. In none was he found lacking.

As he advanced in years and rank the respect of those who knew him intimately increased. In the last years of his life he, as commandant of one of our great military schools, came into intimate contact with an unusually large number of officers of the army as well as civilians. In those years his qualities of courtesy, directness, unselfishness, integrity and loyalty were impressed upon many officers and civilians. His elevating influence will be felt throughout the army during many years to come."

C. S. FARNSWORTH.

For his services with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, General Gordon was decorated by Marshal Petain with the cross of Commander of the Legion of Honor. The Croix de Guerre with Palm was presented to him by the commander of the French Armies of the East. He received the Distinguished Service Medal,

"For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. As Brigade Commander of the 10th Infantry Brigade, he showed great energy and zeal in the conduct of his brigade during the major part of its maneuvers. Later, as Division Commander of the 6th Division, by his painstaking efforts, he brought his division to a marked state of efficiency, rendering services of great value to the American Expeditionary Forces."

To those officers whose privilege it was to serve under General Gordon he will always be remembered as the highest type of Christian gentleman. His devotion to the ideals of his profession and his Alma Mater was almost a religion to him, and the influence which he exerted upon all with whom he came in contact has been a potent force in stimulating in them those ideals of honor, loyalty and justice to which General Gordon devoted his life.

A FORMER AIDE DE CAMP.

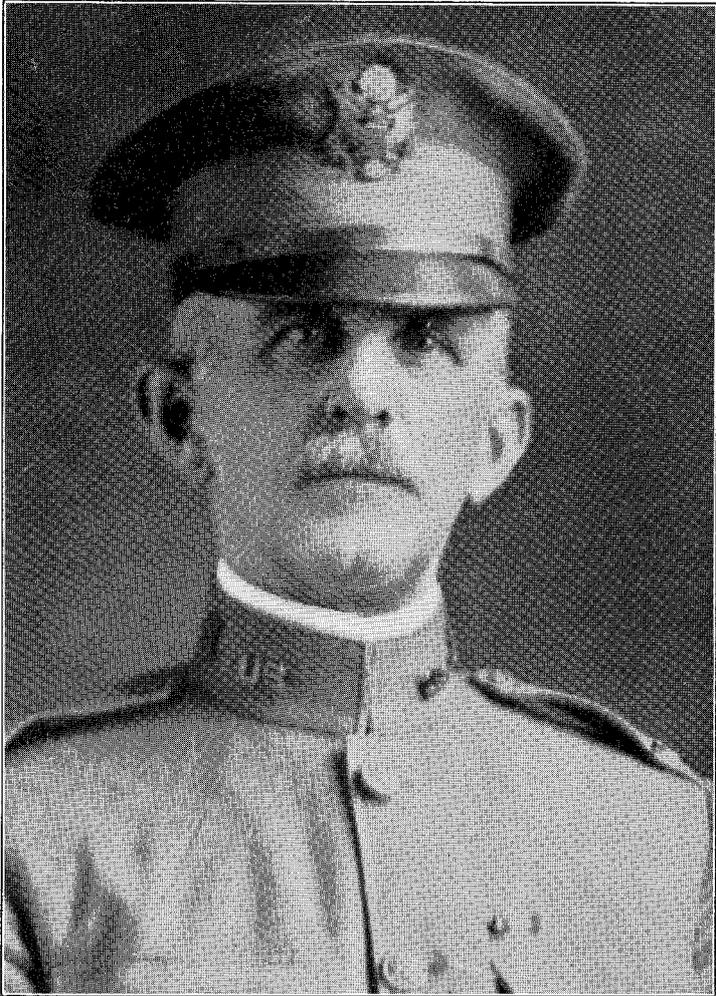

ISAAC WILLIAM LITTELL

No. 2996. Class of 1883.

Died, May 1, 1924, at Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C., aged 66 years.

Brigadier General Isaac W. Littell, U. S. Army, retired, was born in Elizabeth, New Jersey, December 5, 1857. He was appointed to the Military Academy at West Point from New Jersey, graduating with the Class of 1883. Following his graduation he entered the 10th Infantry and saw service on frontier duty through many years, covering posts in Colorado, Indian Territory, New Mexico and Oklahoma, and in 1895, while still serving as Regimental Adjutant of the 10th Infantry, with the rank of Captain, he was assigned to the Quartermaster Corps and served as Quartermaster at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, until November, 1897, when he was ordered to the Quartermaster Depot in New York. He remained there until 1899, and returned again in 1902, for one year, going from New York to the Quartermaster General's Office in Washington, where he remained for five years. He then went to Governor's Island, serving there until 1911, as Chief Quartermaster of the Eastern Department. He saw foreign service in the Philippines from 1899 until 1902, and again from 1911 to 1914.

At the outbreak of the recent war General Littell was in charge of the construction section of the Quartermaster Corps. In view of the tremendous undertakings facing the department at this time, it seemed necessary to give it greater individuality in its operation; and therefore it was deemed expedient to form the Cantonment Division of the Quartermaster Corps, with almost direct authority from the Secretary of War. Eventually, under the stress of added duties and responsibilities arising from the exactions of war conditions, this division outgrew its name, and in the Fall of 1917, it became the Construction Division of the Army. Under the remarkably able guidance of General Littell this division rapidly expanded from its somewhat small beginning until at the time of his retirement it was handling construction work of enormous scope. Possessed of unusual genius for leading and spurring on his men to accomplishment, his success in the way of speeding up work without loss of quality was nothing short of phenomenal, and served also to incite a spirit of emulation in such other agencies as were brought into contact with the temper of achievement which seemed inherent in the groups which served under him. And all of this not only without loss of the regard and affection of his men, but on the contrary he seemed to emanate an influence of good will which inspired a wonderful devotion in the hearts of those who carried on under his guidance. It is rare that so pronounced a genius for organization and leadership is accompanied by such singular patience, helpfulness and comprehension of the problems and viewpoints of others; but General Littell seemed to be a man of such kindly heart and broad understanding that he was big enough to be able to reach the human side of all men, and by that means draw forth the best that each man had it in him to give. His own words shortly before his death express the truth of this summing up, for he said: "The confidence which I placed in men serving under me was never violated. The respect which I entertained for them has been strengthened by the passing years, and if the boys ever need me, call upon me." As this makes evident, he did not lose interest in the personnel or the activities of the Construction Division after he retired from service in 1919, but kept in touch with it and its work up to the end of his life,

BRIGADIER GENERAL ISAAC WILLIAM LITTELL

At the time of his retirement a dinner was given in his honor, presided over by Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and attended by the entire personnel of the Washington office as well as all who could make it possible to reach Washington from the field. Upon this occasion the regard in which he was held by his fellow officers was expressed in glowing tributes of affection and loyalty such as might well stir to pride the heart of any living man. From each one came not only words of praise for his efficiency, his unswerving fidelity to his work and his genius for putting through the matter in hand in an incredibly short space of time, but also the more heart-reaching tributes to his generous sympathy, his consideration and his charity for the failings of others, his ambition for the service rather than for himself, as well as his careful justice and his sturdy confidence in the abilities and right purposes of those with whom he had dealings, either under his command or in his contacts outside of the army. Someone has said: "Our best friend is the one who helps us to find our real selves, and who endeavors to show us how to make proper use of our powers." And this being so, it would seem that General Littell has proven a true friend to a vast number of men who, in the long years of his service, have come under his direct influence or have felt the energizing force of the spirit which animated him and permeated the quality of all activities in which he had a part. His was a rare nature, and one which will leave its impress upon the lives of many who realized the quiet wisdom which underlay his conduct of all which came to his hand to do, and the human touch with which he ever discharged his duties in the affairs of men.

General Littell left a widow, Mrs. Julia B. Littell, who lives in Staunton, Virginia, and three daughters and two sons: Mrs. Alexander M. Patch, wife of Major Alexander M. Patch, Jr., U. S. A.; Mrs. Wm. Owen, wife of Lieutenant Commander Wm. Owen, U. S. N.; Mrs. George S. Bryan, wife of Commander George S. Bryan, U. S. N.; Mr. G. Barrett Littell of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and Mr. Isaac William Littell of Staunton, Virginia.

General Littell was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, his citation reading: "For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished service. As Chief of the Cantonment Division of the Quartermaster General's Office he was charged with the task of building the camps and cantonments of the army raised in the summer of 1917 under conditions imposing almost insuperable obstacles. His completion of this task is a conspicuous example of the exercise of qualities of mind and character making up the highest type of officer."

And so are the qualities and the characteristics of this man's life written out upon the record of his associations with his fellow-men. He could organize, lead, guide, direct and accomplish; but the executive ability which gave him so high a standing in his official capacity was earned and exercised without the sacrifice of those greater and higher traits which draw men together into a better understanding of the real brotherhood of man.

"That love which a man hath rightfully earned in his dealings with his brother,
"That let him use as a stone in the stairway which leads to the heights of All Content."

STEWART LEON THOMPSON

No. 7055. Class of 1923.

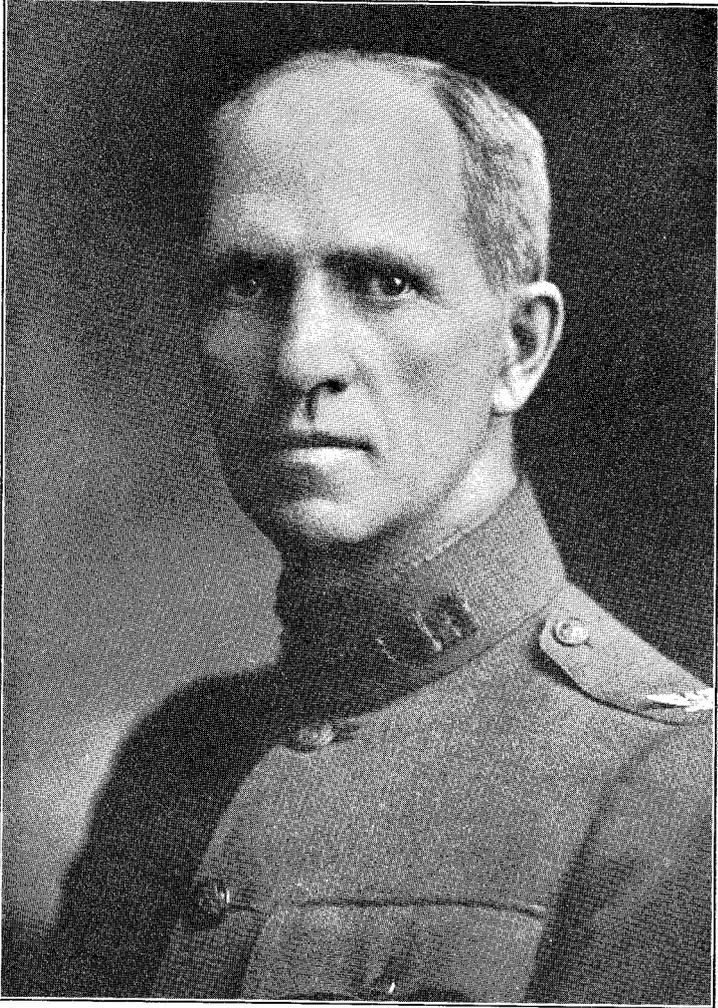

Died, June 5, 1924, at Kelly Field, Texas, aged 25 years.

Stewart Leon Thompson was born in Watertown, New York, April 29, 1899. After graduating from High School, he entered Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and on November 11, 1918, entered the Reserve Officers' Training Camp at Fortress Monroe for the Coast Artillery and obtained his commission in February, 1919. Later, in February, he resigned and received his commission in the O. R. C. to continue his chosen career in civil life, namely, that of a civil engineer. However, the army urge proved too strong so he accepted an appointment to West Point and entered July 9, 1919. He graduated in June, 1923, forsaking his Coast Artillery and accepting his assignment to the Air Service. He entered the Primary School at Brooks Field in September, 1923, and completed his training in March, 1924, and was then assigned to Kelly Field to continue training at the Advanced Flying School. While here, undergoing training in Formation Flying, he was killed when two planes came together in mid-air.

His death closes the career of one of the most promising of the junior pilots in the Air Service. While at Brooks and Kelly his steady and persistent application to his training won the attention of his instructors and the respect of his classmates. He was always a conservative pilot and one who respected and paid close attention to detail. His was a quiet nature and one that did not cater or seek out friends. But to know Tommy was to be with him in the field. He loved nature in all her ways and he was happiest when the water rippled under the bow of the tug or when a writhing trout bent the slender rod, or when his pet gun sent the echoes flying through the woods.

Lieutenant Thompson married Miss Marian Bockus of Watertown, New York, on August 25, 1923. A son, Stewart Leon Thompson, Jr., was born to them on May 11, 1924. Mrs. Thompson and her son are residing in Watertown, New York.

His sacrifice was made for his country, to better fit himself for her demands in the pursuance of the work he loved best.

ROBERT PULLIAM JOHNSTON

No. 3515. Class of 1893.

Died, June 5, 1924, at Asheville, North Carolina, aged 54 years.

Robert Pulliam Johnston was born in Asheville, North Carolina, October 17, 1870. He inherited the courage and mentality of a father who was an officer in the Confederate Army, and later an honor graduate of the University of North Carolina; he also inherited the fine courtesy and high breeding of a mother who belonged to one of the first families of the state. Because of limited school facilities in Asheville, young Johnston was sent at the age of eleven years to Bingham Military Academy, one of the foremost institutions in the South, which took its tone and standards from Colonel Robert Bingham. Undoubtedly the high sense of personal honor which Johnston inherited was still more deeply rooted by the code of ethics Colonel Bingham instilled into his students. "A lie was not tolerated at Bingham." Graduating from Bingham too young to enter college, he filled in two years studying and teaching, and in 1889 went to the University of North Carolina, leaving there a few months later to enter West Point. Graduating fourth in the Class of '93, he had the honor of being ranking Cadet Officer in his senior year. After two years in the Engineer's School at Willet's Point, he was ordered to Key West, Florida, where his courage and high principles were put to a severe test in a conflict with the contractors who were doing construction work there. He was fully sustained in the position he took by the officers on the Board of Inquiry which was sent to investigate, and the government was saved thousands of dollars.

He was rewarded for this conspicuous service by receiving a Captain's commission when war was declared against Spain. Orders to join his regiment in the Philippine Islands were countermanded, and he was directed to plant mines in the St. Johns River as a safeguard against attack by the Spanish naval forces. When it became necessary to remove the mines, after the war was over, and his men hesitated to disconnect them because of a fatality which had occurred, and which naturally brought a vivid realization of the danger involved, Captain Johnston dived to the bottom of the river where the mines lay and disconnected them with his own hands. This act was characteristic of the man. He always found a way to meet emergencies and overcome difficulties, and never required of his men any service of danger he was not willing to share.

In 1899 he was ordered to Newport, Rhode Island, to take charge of construction work there, and two years later to San Francisco to serve on a commission to regulate hydraulic mining. In 1902 he was assigned to duty at Wilmington, North Carolina, and won appreciation from the people of that city by obtaining for them, by an able report on the subject, a deepening of Cape Fear River.

During the war with Spain, Captain Johnston remained on duty in spite of a critical illness, the seeds of which his physicians think caused his early death. Believing that his health would be improved by living in the mountains of North Carolina, he resigned from the army in 1905 and retired to his home in Asheville. Shortly after returning to private life he was requested by the Mayor of Asheville to build a bridge at an important site; and this now stands as a marvel of economic construction as well as strength and beauty. Engineers have been sent from other cities to study it.

From a peaceful and beautiful apple orchard in the heart of the North Carolina mountains to the training camp at Funston was a dramatic change, and one brought about only through great personal sacrifice. He knew that he was not physically strong and that if he escaped the exigencies of battle the exposure incident to field work would probably claim him an easy victim. But there was never a hint even to his immediate family of what it cost him to part from them in the gray dawn of June 12, 1917. Only after his return, he quietly revealed that he had at that time no hope of returning; at least he considered the probability very slight.

Grateful acknowledgement is made to Major Gurdon G. Black and to Captain Julius O. Lallee of the 314th Engineers, 89th Division, for this account of Colonel Johnston's service with the regiment.

COLONEL JOHNSTON'S SERVICE WITH THE 314TH ENGINEERS.

With the organization of the first units of the National Army, in September, 1917, Colonel Johnston was assigned to be Lieutenant Colonel of the 314th Engineers, the Pioneer Regiment of the 89th

Division, to be trained at Camp Funston, Kansas. The regimental commander was his old friend of earlier days in the service, William B. Ladue.

The training days were interrupted by illness. A slight cold, uncared for in his zeal for his work, grew steadily worse and developed into a severe case of mastoiditis, for which an operation was necessary. This was performed in Fort Riley Hospital and for weeks the patient was critically ill, recovering slowly, and being still more slow to regain his strength. His hearing was permanently impaired and only those intimately associated with him can appreciate the hardship this imposed and how it handicapped him in his subsequent service, or the fortitude with which he bore it. His kindness, his seeming obliviousness to the pain, his cheery greetings, all will be remembered by his associates of those hospital days.

While on sick leave, at home, in North Carolina, in April, 1918, he was called back to duty by the transfer of Colonel Ladue to the command of Corps Regiment, the 603d Engineers, and his own promotion to the command of the 314th.

His record from that time is that of his regiment. They were ordered overseas with the infantry units of the Division, left Funston May 28, 1918, sailed from New York June 12th, and reached France, via Liverpool, Winchester and Southampton, at Cherbourg, June 28th. After a month in Rimauville Training area, at Orquevaux and Humberville, north of Charumont, they moved into the Toul Sector, August 3d, relieving the 307th Engineers of the 83d Division, working mainly on completing their training for the offensive movements that were to come.

Going into the lines early in August, 1918, in the Lucsy section of the St. Mihiel salient, the 314th was constantly in action with the division for about 100 days, being out of the zone of fire only long enough to make the move from St. Mihiel sector to the Argonne. This move involved an all night march and all night move by truck train, which was greater hardship than the time spent at the front.

Throughout the battles of St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne, Colonel Johnston constantly exposed himself to danger in making frequent reconnaissances at the front. These, in addition to the danger to which he never seemed to give a thought, levied a heavy tax on his physical strength.

Miles of mud were not lightly traveled even by the strongest, but if he ever spared himself a step or a risk no one ever heard of it. One of his junior officers confesses that it was always embarrassing to be with him when the "hardware" was flying too close for comfort, because Colonel Johnston never seemed to be aware of it, or that shelter might be resorted to. Whatever may have been his motive, his conduct under fire was not that of a reckless defiance of danger which wins the title of "hero" and decorations for bravery. His manner was rather a calm disregard of danger, born of intense earnestness in the task to be performed; there was no room in his mind for thought of himself.

During all this period Colonel Johnston functioned as Division Engineer and as Regimental Commander. How he managed to stand up to the double duty when he was obviously not physically strong was a marvel to more than one of his junior officers. It sometimes meant more than two jobs, for it was not always possible to have Regimental Headquarters in the same place as Division Headquarters. He never spared himself, but by example spurred his men on, seemingly oblivious to all danger, far out in advance of the advance units and under fire, as cool as though he were in a drawing room.

His personal courage, his whole-hearted determination to carry out his mission, his continual command to push on, these are the traits of a soldier that endeared him to his men. But not these alone, for there was his thoughtfulness, his kindly courtesy, his interest in everyone in every position. A Sergeant Major at Regimental Headquarters was heard to say, "Colonel Johnston would sleep in the mud before he would rank a Lieutenant's orderly out of a dry billet." A souvenir booklet published after the war, by one of the companies, was dedicated to "our fighting Colonel, who was loved by every member of the regiment."

Such appreciation of Colonel Johnston by his friends has been a source of pride and comfort to his family.

"He was one of the finest gentlemen I have ever known, and I am proud that I could count him a friend; men who clothe their strength of mind and character in kindness, gentleness, sympathy, have ever been my ideal, and such a man was Robert Johnston."

THEO. MASTIN LOVEJOY.

"I would like to picture Robert as I knew and loved him. I would like to show that since boyhood I have honored him as a rare example of rugged strength combined with rich measure of gentleness, tenderness and human understanding. I would like to reveal him as the ideal Christian and comrade."

NORMAN McLOUD.

"There was no man for whom I had a higher regard or a warmer or truer affection. My feelings for him were shared by all the members of '93, and no member of the class will be more generally or sincerely missed. He was a prince among men."

EDWARD J. TIMBERLAKE, '93.

"Colonel Johnston meant so much to all of us who knew him in the old regiment. I shall never forget him, his quiet friendly way, his wanting to make things easy for everyone but himself, his never-failing courtesy, and his forgetting of himself for the rest of us, his tender great big-heartedness; there are so many memories come flooding to my mind, of camp and train, and then in battle. How he would go out in front as if to set us younger men an example, and, minding neither bullets nor shell, would go straight out to his objective, never hesitating, never seeming to think of anything else but the duty to be done.

BRIGADIER GENERAL EDWARD EDGAR WOOD

It is no wonder the regiment loved him, for he showed himself their leader and their friend. He was so patient a sufferer. I think his courage made him so. I shall always be grateful that I was privileged to serve with him and to know him so intimately."

GURDON BLACK,
Major, 314th Engineers.

"Please be very sure that nothing could afford me greater interest or satisfaction than to assist in any way the deserved recording of the achievements of one who gave our army not only a splendid example of courage and devotion to duty, but displayed at all times those less spectacular, but really finer qualities of a real gentleman which ugliness of war could not dim."

JULIUS O. LALLEE,
Captain, 314th Engineers.

"Colonel Johnston's death brings with it a sense of very real personal loss. I remember his good work at Camp Funston in command of the 314th Engineers of the 89th Division, all during those busy days when we were getting ready for France. It was work which contributed very materially to the splendid record which the 89th Division made at home and abroad."

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General, 89th Division.

No incident, perhaps in his entire life, gave Colonel Johnston more pleasure and satisfaction than the reunion with his class, thirty of whom were present, in 1923.

Colonel Johnston was married in 1898 to Miss Alexandra Mary Garrett and is survived by his widow, one son, Robert Alexander Johnston, and one daughter, Mary Frances Johnston. He lavished upon his family the devotion of a deep and rich nature.

He was a devout member of the First Presbyterian Church of Asheville and was actively interested in its work and benevolences.

His death occurred, very suddenly, at his home in Asheville, on June 5, 1924.

EDWARD EDGAR WOOD

No. 2317. Class of 1870.

Died, June 21, 1924, at West Chester, Pennsylvania, aged 77 years.

Edward Edgar Wood was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, September 17, 1846. He entered the Pennsylvania State Normal School, but before he had completed his studies there he enlisted as a private in the 17th Pennsylvania Cavalry on September 8, 1862, and served thence forward through the Civil War. Not long after his enlistment in December, 1862, he was taken prisoner at Occoquan, Virginia, and confined in Castle Thunder at Richmond, but was exchanged in May, 1863. Wood was in succession Commissary Sergeant, First Sergeant, and (May, 1864,) First Lieutenant, and performed the duties of Regimental Adjutant from September, 1864, until his regiment was mustered out, June 16, 1865. He then joined the 2nd Provisional Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was mustered out of the Volunteer Service on August 7, 1865.

In the Spring of 1866 Wood was offered a commission in the Regular Army, but declined the appointment, as he wished to go to West Point. Accordingly he took the competitive examination and was successful over sixteen competitors. He entered in June, 1866, and was graduated four years later No. 6 in a class of 56, when he chose the 8th Cavalry and joined his regiment at Fort Union, New Mexico, in September, 1870. In November, 1872, Wood was ordered to the Academy as Instructor of French, and in 1876 was appointed Assistant Professor of that language. Three years later he became Aide de Camp to General Schofield, and in 1882 rejoined his regiment, only to return one year later to West Point as Assistant Professor of Spanish. Captain in 1886, he joined his troop and took part in the Geronimo Campaign. He returned to West Point in 1887 as Assistant Professor of Spanish, and on the retirement of General Andrews in 1892 took his place as Professor of Modern Languages. On this duty he remained until he retired, September 17, 1910, by operation of law, as Brigadier General.

He now took up his residence at West Chester, Pennsylvania, and it was here that he died in 1924.

After his retirement he took but little interest in public affairs, probably on account of his health, but was ever ready to lend a hand in time of need.

Of a scholarly disposition, General Wood was deeply read in French history, particularly of the times of Louis XIV and of the Revolution. But this was only one of many subjects that attracted his attention and interest. He shrank, however, from thrusting himself forward, and it was only by intimate personal contact that one could discover the range and accuracy of his information.

He was buried at West Point, June 24, 1924.

WILLIAM HENRY UPHAM

No. 2139. Class of 1866.

Died, July 2, 1924, at Marshfield, Wisconsin, aged 82 years.

It was in June, 1862, that there first began to report at the Adjutant's office—then in the Library building—candidates who came from what we spoke of as "the front", among them a stocky, sturdy young man, with a curious record: Shot through the lungs and left for dead on the field of First Bull Run, revived sufficiently to be taken to hospital at Richmond, he began to mend even as his family and friends were listening to his funeral sermon at Racine, Wisconsin.

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM HENRY UPHAM

A Wisconsin product was he, with a quaint mode of speech and an unlimited fund of friendliness and humor. Almost twenty-one, then the boundary line between the eligible and the ineligible, so that if he failed to pass either mental or physical examination in June he might as well fall out at once, he came as one of President Lincoln's chosen few "at large". He hailed from a state whose every congressional district was represented, yet was destined to be accorded two more. Upwards of one hundred names were on the original list of appointees. Of that number upwards of eighty lads appeared for the entrance examinations, then a mere bagatelle. Six or eight more joined us by the 28th of August, thirteen of the entire number being presidential appointees, and it may be said at the outset that most of these fell by the wayside, and Mr. Lincoln's two from the Badger State and the old Iron Brigade of the Army of the Potomac, were the topmost of the few that survived.

Coming from the same state and the same brigade, they were nevertheless strangers to each other until their meeting in "D" Company's barracks on the 11th of June. The older, a corporal in "F" Company, 2nd Wisconsin Infantry, having been shot out of its ranks before it joined, later in the summer, the brigade in which the younger was serving as mounted orderly at headquarters, yet their fortunes had been oddly intermingled months before. The junior Senator from Wisconsin had begged of the President one of his ten appointments "at-large" for his gound friend, William H. Upham, of Racine, and who could gainsay such claims as his?—Shot through and through, as has been said, and left for dead on the field of our first battle, and too old to wait for a later chance when the President was reminded of his promise to appoint the younger lad—who could wait three years and still be eligible. The matter was quickly settled when brought to the attention of the original brigade commander, whose nominee was at once withdrawn in favor of the superior claim and greater need of the elder lad; yet, late in May the discovery that one of Lincoln's appointees was not yet sixteen enabled him to redeem the promise made the autumn previous, and so it happened that two of the White House's thirteen hailed from Wisconsin. The two gripped hands a fortnight later and there and then began a comradeship that lasted sixty years and more. Of all the army friends that Upham had known and cherished, just one stood by his flag-draped casket to lay thereon the parting tribute of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and the wreath of the Class of 1866—the classmate whose name had been withdrawn in the Spring of '62 that the wounded soldier might have the one chance open to him of a cadetship at West Point.

Once admitted the Fates and the old cadets were kind to Upham. Yearlings were more numerous than plebes in '62, and the latter were worked to the limit by day and "deviled", as was the synonym for hazing, rather beyond the limit by night. "Yanking" was the favorite form of diversion at the expense of the new comers. It consisted simply of bringing about a change of base on part of the plebe, by the operators seizing the lower end of the blanket (our bedding was made down on the wooden tent floor) and smoothly, swiftly sliding the recumbent form of the occupant, bedding and all, out into the dusty company street, and as much further as the perpetrators saw fit. If it seemed desirable to dump the occupant into the depths of Fort Clinton ditch, or to "continue the march" to Execution Hollow, a double team was required. In these involuntary excursions Upham was seldom allowed to take part. He did his share of the day's work with the rest of us, and indomitable good nature, but there were yearlings who somehow could not "yank" a man who the previous year had been declared shot dead in battle. Another year, and so numerous were the appointees from the volunteers, the Corps lost in a measure the feeling that seemed to attach to Upham.

Once in barracks all deviling ceased, except in modified form, for the benefit of the few September entries. Upham went through the four academic years placidly content, was graduated into the Artillery arm of the service, spent his three months' leave with the home folk, had a brief tour of duty at Barrancas, a year or so in garrison at Fortress Monroe, and found himself every few days on duty as custodian of the late head and front of the late hard-fighting Confederacy, Mr. Jefferson Davis; had many a pleasant chat with his distinguished prisoner and grew to feel for him a very sincere admiration. Another year took him to duty at Fort Wayne, Detroit, and it was while here that he began seriously to consider the question of remaining a lieutenant the better half of a lifetime, or of quitting the army and seeking his fortune in civil life.

True to its traditions, the Congress had first, in its re-organization of the "permanent establishment" close upon the heels of the war, largely added to its fighting force, mainly in the Infantry and Cavalry—forty-five regiments of the former and ten of the latter being prescribed, and three-fourths of the commissions in the newly-created units being held for officers from the volunteers. Then, three years thereafter, repenting of its action and impelled by the pacifists and economists at home, it reduced its forty-five thousand by nearly one-half, telescoped forty-five regiments of foot into twenty-five, distributed the surplus officers among the regiments of Artillery and Cavalry and returned to civil life, after eight years of separation from the professions, trades or occupations they had abandoned at the call of the nation in its hour of peril, to begin the world anew, incidentally blocking promotion in the line of the army for no less than a generation. It was a dismal outlook for the recently graduated sons of our Academy, and Upham, by this time a married man, took serious thought over the prospect in store for him. He was serving as aide de camp to the temporary commander of the district; he had risen to the foot of the list of first lieutenants and saw between him and the coveted captaincy in his regiment twenty-five dueplorably healthy and serviceable men of middle age, no one of whom could hope for one step on the ladder of promotion so long as there lived on the unassigned list a single soldier of the rank of captain.

The next thing his scattered classmates heard of Upham was that his resignation had been accepted, he had returned to the scene of his funeral oration some seven years earlier, and then turned his rugged face northward and taken to the woods.

Born at Westminster, Massachusetts, of sturdy old English parentage—his father being Alvin Upham, his mother Sarah Derby—tracing his ancestry to John Upham, who left Somersetshire, England, for Massachusetts with the Hull colony in 1635, he had learned from early boyhood the lessons of economy, frugality and self-denial. He was eleven years of age when his parents moved to Niles, Michigan, where within a year the father died, and the widowed mother, having friends at Racine, Wisconsin, moved thither and made it her home. Educated in the public schools, but working long hours to help her, Upham had learned the value of both time and money, but the call to arms, the swift assembly of Racine's first company, the Belle City Rifles, brought about his almost instant appeal to the aging mother, and her prompt consent, whereupon Upham marched buoyantly away his twentieth birthday following within a few days.

From the date of his resignation in 1869, for nearly a decade, the Class heard next to nothing of him. Of his trials, privations and struggles from him at least they never heard. The lumber business was then in its prime, and men with capital to invest reaped speedy and substantial reward. Little capital, if any, had Upham, but there were friends who banked on his energy and integrity. He started at the bottom somewhere about Shawano, moved later to Angelica, working, working every hour of daylight and many an hour of dark, and in 1878, with the modest fruits of his toil and tireless industry, he arrived at the newly platted village of Marshfield, in the heart of the pine woods, and then things began to move. In 1880 there was held in Milwaukee a great gathering of Wisconsin's soldiery. To the number of eight thousand they assembled by battalion or battery on the bluffs to the north of the city—the badge of the Iron Brigade among the most prominent. There to welcome and review were Grant, Sheridan and Gibbon, leaders whom they had learned to honor and obey. There were reunions innumerable, and there the two former members of that famous command clasped hands for the first time since their parting in '66.

And it was fun to hear Upham tell of his experiences. Life had been anything but beer and skittles; rather a stern up-hill pull he had found it, and only now had he been able to call it a success. With his scrapings and savings he had come to Marshfield—a veritable shanty town when first he saw it—but he had come at the psychological moment. He had money to invest, he had experience to guide, he had energy and grit to hold him to his task, and it wasn't a year before Marshfield hailed him as its foremost citizen.

As to the decade that followed, one has to choose between the probably over enthusiastic words of some one of many beneficiaries or the crabbed views of the rural iconoclast or business rival. Quoting from one of the former, the following is submitted as at least much more than half founded in fact:

"Once fairly settled in the new home, Upham proceeded, as he said, to build up a place big enough for his business and the 'plant' of the Upham Manufacturing Co. so the town of Marshfield grew apace. We needed a bank, so Upham built one, with himself as president and pretty much everything but bookkeeper. We needed a school, so Upham built that, with himself as school commissioner. We needed a general store, so Upham started one and almost stocked it. We needed a church and Upham did much to build it, and but for doctrinal differences with the sexton and congregation might have occupied the pulpit. Later still he built the water works of Marshfield and, before such a thing was even projected in the metropolis, Milwaukee, he had financed, installed and completed the electric lighting system," all of which may possibly be considered in connection with that oft-repeated statement to the effect that the West Pointer is a flat failure in civil pursuits.

"When we needed a Mayor we unanimously decided on Upham, who held the office until so busy he could hold it no longer. There was a time, 'according to the oldest inhabitant', when Upham filled six offices on the salary of one and paid that himself. Finally, when a grateful populace decided Marshfield to be a misnomer, Upham having drained the marsh and built up the field, the almost unanimous choice for the name was Uphamton, until it was vetoed by the Mayor, who was sustained by the Board of Aldermen, composed principally of Upham employees."

Certain it is that ten years at Marshfield had made Upham a popular idol in mid-Wisconsin. He was everybody's friend, if one might judge by the hails that greeted him every block of the route from the railway station to his home, as noted by a fellow graduate who had stopped over to see him just twenty years after they had "doffed the cadet and changed the gray for the blue." A few years earlier, when Lucius Fairchild, of his old regiment, was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in Wisconsin, Upham had served as aide de camp with the Grand Army title of Major, and Major he was called by the state at large, but not by his fellow citizens of the home town; Annapolis has his word for that. President Arthur had made him a member of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, and in the Navy, mingling as do their graduates with the military magnates of the seven seas, they are punctilious as to military titles—they have to be—whereas in this, as in other matters, the sovereign citizen is a law unto himself. The newspaper announcement had called him Major; the button of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion proclaimed him an officer of civil war service on the Union side, but the Army Regulations no longer bore his name. So the courteous aide of the Superintendent had to appeal to the subject direct and, begging his pardon, with many apologies, inquired as to what really was his title. "Why," said Upham, "when I was a lieutenant everybody called me Mister; after I left the army, the Grand Army called me Major, but at home, where everybody knows me, they call me 'You Bill', which at Annapolis wouldn't do at all."

One day in Milwaukee, and a furious gale of wind, everybody along the sidewalk stopped, turned and with bated breath watched an athletic fellow citizen chase an electric car almost to the third street from the starting point. It was a magnificent sprint, and when at last, well nigh exhausted, but triumphant, his final spring landed him on the rear platform, cheers and applause rewarded his hard-earned victory.

But then his hat blew off.

So in like manner, after long years of ceaseless effort, Upham saw himself at the head of a prosperous business, his factories covering almost three blocks of a bustling little frontier city, with a comfortable homestead and an equally comfortable income, and after long, vigorous and sustained endeavor he appeared to have landed on a platform of prosperity and security, so, too, did his hat blow off—much of Marshfield and most of the Upham plant, all in a moment, going up in smoke, a furious fire in a driving gale the inciting cause.

Yet it surprised no one who knew him that, cheery as ever, the Laird o' Marshfield should appear in Milwaukee with the announcement that they'd rebuild at once. It surprised them still less when, seven years thereafter, he came again to the city with the announcement that everything was booming and he was ready to run for Governor.

Then followed the two most remarkable years of "The Major's" life. Of politics, statecraft and the like Upham knew next to nothing. Of the men whose lives are spent and livelihood obtained in the manipulation and machinery of political endeavor he knew little more. Honest and loyal, truthful and square, overflowing with the milk of human kindness, "with malice toward none and charity for all," something of an idol with the old soldier element, the farmer, and the lumbermen swarming all over the northern counties, as well as with the general public of the southern range, absolutely without enemies and without guile, moreover, believed to be in possession of funds in abundance and known to have a nature that was all whirlwind energy and with the prestige of success, he was just the man the masses would probably turn to in the hope of ending a political situation absolutely abnormal. The time was ripe for revolt, and all that was needed was a standard bearer to catch the public fancy and possibly settle the bills. Astute leaders of the party temporarily "out", got their heads together on a plan of campaign and speedily hit on the plan.

The situation was simple: Six years previous good old Uncle Jerry Rusk, after seven years as Governor, had turned over the chair to another old soldier, the leader of the dairymen of the state, nearly all of them Republicans. Seeking re-election two years later, the then incumbent, needing as he thought an issue, unearthed a law of Democratic origin, providing that twelve weeks of every school year the English language only should be used by teacher and pupil. A shrewd editor of the Democratic paper having perhaps the greatest influence in the state, suddenly saw an opportunity. This move, he declared, would seriously embarrass the priestly teachers and foreign-born pupils of the parish schools, notably of the German race. It was a bitter blow, he declared, at the parish schools, a challenge to the Catholic Church, a dastardly attempt to overthrow religion, and in no time at all the clerics all over the state had taken alarm, and their fears spread to their congregations. The lion lay down with the lamb. Devout Catholics and Protestant Lutherans united in denunciation of the measure, and when election day came around the Republican party was snowed under, the German vote, hitherto almost entirely Republican, had turned to the Democratic side, and the two candidates, fellow soldiers in the same regiment throughout the war, and brother editors of popular papers, were amazed at the virulence of the resultant storm. Four years the state remained "safe for Democracy", but meanwhile the priesthood and the people had had time to grasp the situation and reconsider the question.

Just as when he moved to Marshfield, Upham had come at the psychological moment, but even his backers were astonished at the result. Nominated in June, Upham led his ticket in a landslide that swept him into power with the biggest plurality ever polled in Wisconsin.

While their adherents were abusing each other all over the state, the rival candidates, devoted personal friends, fellow comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, fellow members of the same Commandery of the Loyal Legion, were wondering when they might be permitted to go fishing together again. And when the astounding vote was heralded the morning after election, the delightful humorist who had figured as Governor the previous four years, wired his successful friend and opponent: "The earth is yours and the fullness thereof," and on a sharp morning in January the red carnation "button hole" of Governor Peck and his worshipful clans gave way to the spotless white of "You Bill" and his cheering throng of followers, soldier and civilian, and the Republican banner once more waved over the state so lately imperiled. At least that was the way exultant editors would have it.

Then came the days of an administration that baffled all commentators. Elected as head of the Republican ticket, Upham proved the most democratic of executives as he set forth on his brief voyage over political seas. Hail fellow well met with every man in Madison, Governor Bill had been secretive as ever had Grant over the choice of his cabinet. Personally, Upham had picked the clerks, doormen and messengers in each of the appointive offices, and the armless old soldier reappeared in full number. Across the hall from the executive offices were those of the Secretary of State. Seated in the former, sheer friendliness for mankind and utter inexperience in the ways and wiles of politics. Thronged across the way the sagacity that comes with years of breathing no other atmosphere than that of the halls of legislation, the offices of officialdom, the ante rooms of Congress, caucus, convention—the council chambers of committees innumerable, the closet of the party boss. The former could never fathom the latter; the latter could never understand the former. For all comers, the more the merrier, the Governor had the cordial hand clasp, the grin of welcome, the inevitable story. Even while listening to one he would be looking for others, halting the possible passer-by with the hail invariable, "Say, hold on. What's your hurry? Come in a minute," breaking in on an elaborate explanation with the unlooked for presentation of undesired audience—introducing sworn enemies who had not "spoken" for years, shelving matters of state for jocular queries as to fireside happenings, sidetracking his secretaries for casual callers, showering invitations to lunch, dinner, spend the evening, forgetful of engagements elsewhere, signing for charities even that most charitable of women, Mary Kelly Upham, would never have countenanced, and when squarely cornered by office hunters, demanding the ousting of incumbents of positions long since claimed as promised to them, shunting them off on that most loyal, long-suffering, patient and prayerful of private secretaries, Anderson, whom three Governors had sworn by. "He speaks in parables," was the plaint of the editor of the State Journal. "Who can understand him?"

Nothing better illustrates the characteristic benevolence of our soldier-governor—we had six in an unbroken line—than Upham's handling of the Governor's cottage episode in the summer of '96. The state military reservation at Camp Douglas occupied at least four weeks each year by Wisconsin's really soldierly guard, was a beautiful spot. In camp with the Guard during both summers of Upham's single term were the 3rd Infantry from Fort Snelling, Hare's half squadron of the 7th Cavalry and Capron's light battery of the 1st Artillery, and both the Governor and Lieutenant Governor took delight in spending many days with them. Perched along what was known as Flag Staff, or Headquarters Ridge, was a long, low frame building in which were the offices and sleeping quarters of the inspector instructors and certain state officers on special duty. Aligned with these, some thirty yards eastward, was a little frame building containing three bed rooms and an office or reception room, with a broad enclosed piazza. The "Governor's Cottage", it was called, and year after year the executive, with two or three of his personal staff, spent many a day, sometimes a week at a time, watching the work of the state force and on Thursday afternoons reviewing the entire command, and here Upham was again in his glory. Nevertheless, he could not attend to the duties of his office, his big plant at Marshfield, and his occasional tours about the state, and spend the entire month with his soldier friends, Regular or National Guard, at the reservation.

Leaving camp, as a rule, early Friday morning, he would reappear late the following Wednesday. It was a way of his when spinning swiftly to his destination, to scout through the railway train for a chat with the dozen friends or followers he was sure to find, his cigar tip tilted, his genial face aglow with cordiality and kindness, and it was bound to happen that one or more of the train load would be accosted on parting with the inevitable, "Say, look here, I want you to see our camp, our soldiers. You must come. I've got to be away nearly a week. Bring the missus and the baby, bring the whole family, and tell Williams (Camp Quartermaster with efficiency developed to the —nth power and beyond), tell Williams I said to put you all in my shack and rig you up a table at the officers' mess. Just you move in and make yourselves at home." Within twenty-four hours, by which time State Senator Smith had hastened home, packed up the family and started, jubilant, to camp, and within which time in the multiplicity of his affairs, business, political or financial, Upham would certainly forget the entire interview, and when the Attorney General, or the State Treasurer, or Insurance Commissioner or other functionary would appear at the executive offices, looking pallid and overworked in the mud-summer heat and, filled with sympathy and concern, the Governor would break up the conference with his, "Say, this town is no place for you, with the mercury at 90; just go home, pack your bag, take the next train for Douglas, family and all. Tell Williams to fix you up for the week and as much longer as you can stay," all this totally oblivious of the fact that by his own suggestion, one of his aides de camp, wife and youngsters, had already moved in, and Colonel Williams, well nigh distracted, would find himself trying to provide quarters for two families of outsiders when inside there was barely room for one. There was no such limit to the Governor's good intentions.

Indeed that spirit of kindness and charity for all seemed to be Upham's salient point and sometimes most vulnerable. Looking about for errors on which to base their opposition to a second term, political foes found no little trouble. Personal enemies were so few that they might be numbered on the fingers of one hand. With Governor Bill's political problems this chronicle has nothing to do. In brief, it may be said that with Anderson, and Anderson's wide knowledge of men and study of measures to be ever at his service, Governor Upham steered serenely through the whirlpool of Wisconsin politics, and having, as he said, seen his portrait in oil duly hung on the walls of the executive offices, he was quite content to seek no second term and thereafter to give his entire attention to the affairs of the manufacturing company at Marshfield.

There came a time when he believed he could fill and find pleasure in the post of Minister to Mexico, and he could have had it, but level-headed advisers and the family physician warned him that neither Mrs. Upham nor he could long live at the altitude of the Halls of the Montezumas. His heart was not what it had been. A long, indeed almost fatal, spell of illness, from which he finally emerged, weak and sorely perturbed in spirit, proved in his case, as in the death of his devoted wife but a short time thereafter, that the doctors were right.

Long as is this wandering biography, it would be utterly incomplete if the subject of Upham's charities and widespread benevolence were not more fully set forth. He carried the pardoning power to the limit; he nursed the snake that turned and stung him as did no other man your memorialist has ever heard of—that in releasing from life imprisonment criminals whom the people held infinitely deserving their punishment; that in harboring, restoring and supporting other criminals but yesterday released from years of well-merited imprisonment, the urging and influence of his too merciful wife and sole confidante were more than his common sense could withstand, we who knew and loved him fully believed at the time and believe to this day. Yet, as he said, if it be inevitable for man to err, it is at least in accord with the divine teaching of Him who died for our sins, that the error should be upon the side of mercy.

But it failed to meet the views of the pragmatic public. So our Governor decided not to run for that second term. His affairs had become a trifle tangled; they needed his daily supervision, and it was in the decade immediately following his return to Marshfield that that well nigh fatal illness occurred; and only a few years after that disturbing seizure that his devoted chum, as she called herself, his beloved helpmeet, sickened and died.

She had shared his years of exile, his privations and his struggles, shared his sorrows, too, though they were few in number and, so buoyant was his nature, were speedily overcome. He who loved children and longed for a son to bear his name and carry on his undertakings, seemed destined to be childless. A distant relative had died, leaving almost destitute two little daughters, lovely in form, feature and disposition, and these they took unto themselves, reared, educated and learned to love as though they had been their very own, and these they formally adopted. These became the life and joy of their fireside, but, one after the other, they married, and again the elders mourned and the homestead became silent. Then came her lamented death and for a time Upham seemed unable to rally. "I don't know whether I am coming or going," he wrote to a classmate, when the physicians warned him that brooding over his bereavement would never do. They sent him forth in search of health. He took to house-boating down the Mississippi and eastward along the shores of the salty sea, on whose borders he had served in his early days as a commissioned officer. It proved a wise move. He tried it again and coasted about the palmy shores of Florida and up the eastern coast line of the Carolinas. He had purposed revisiting Old Point Comfort, where he had foregathered with the head of the hard-fighting, hard-dying Confederacy, but in the course of time and travel he found himself tied up long weeks at Beaufort, North Carolina.

Less than two years after his graduation Upham, as has been said, married Mary Kelly, at Racine, and forty-five years was the sum of their wedded life, a union harmonious, yet unblessed by that for which he longed. Less than two years after her death, in 1912, he married Grace Mason, the daughter of James Bruce Mason and Letitia Kirkland, his wife, prominent in social circles of Beaufort. Life had become indescribably lonely to him. His health again had suffered. He felt himself "going," as he said, and yet at 75 Upham had so much to live for, and all of a sudden, as it were, new hope, new life, renewed ambition, energy and purpose came to him with this new alliance. Once again his voice had much of the old hearty ring to it, as he greeted associates in the home city of his making, and when in 1916 a son was born to him, the son he had longed for nearly fifty years, his joy was boundless. "I am the happiest man in all the world," he declared, when Billy, Jr., was big enough to toddle about at the heels of his adoring father, and yet his blessings were not ended, for five years later there came yet another sturdy youngster to claim his share of paternal pride and caresses. To see "The Governor" or "The Major" or just "You Bill" striding about the streets of Marshfield, with those lively little fellows clinging to either hand, skipping blithely along beside him, was one of Marshfield's delights, and the photograph of her octogenarian banker, builder, manufacturer, elder, school commissioner, former mayor and common councilman, and honored executive, with those burly, laughing little men, perched one on either shoulder, is a work of art which Marshfield even today can point to with infinite pride, for one and all its people loved and honored him.

Nine years ago what was left of the Class of '66 re-assembled at the Point for the fiftieth anniversary of their graduation. One or two there were who wrote the class adjutant and executive that—it would be impossible. Half across the continent had some of us, one at least, to come, and railway rates were all too high. Yet every man of the surviving twelve was at his place when, as plebes in '62, they dropped instantly into their chairs at the command: "Candidates take seats." Upham, at least, could tell what brought about the change of base, but Upham did not, nor would it be like him if he did.

One year ago, as these lines are penned, returning from a joyous visit with his wife and boys at Beaufort, Upham caught en route an ugly cold and paid all too little heed to it. He was a stricken man by the time he reached home, for pneumonia had set in and, in spite of all that medical science could do, that indomitable old heart of his at last gave way and all Marshfield went into mourning. All the adjacent counties seemed gathered along the broad thoroughfares as the heavy casket, buried deep in flowers, was borne slowly to the family vault in the distant cemetery. Everywhere along the way the flag he loved and had so gallantly served and defended, drooped at half mast; everywhere uncovered heads were bowed in homage, and voices, even those of little children, were hushed in sorrow and reverence. Known to them one and all as friend, fellow man and benefactor, even the envious few who had begrudged the wide-spread affection in which he so many a long year had been held, could not longer begrudge him the tribute of their respect or deny him the name so universally accorded. For years throughout his long career of usefulness he had been their unchallenged leader; for years his beneficence and charity had been the theme of almost every pen and tongue. Wronging no man, great or small, he had held steadfast to the golden rule that governed his every word and deed, and in his death Wisconsin mourned him as a citizen worthy his station in her Hall of Fame, and a soldier beyond reproach.

CHARLES KING.

JAMES BRAILSFORD ERWIN

No. 2848. Class of 1880.

Died, July 10, 1924, at Pasadena, California, aged 68 years.

Brigadier General James B. Erwin, U. S. A., retired, an officer of distinguished service in Indian warfare, in the Philippine Insurrection, in the Mexican troubles, and who led the 6th Division of the Regular Army on the battle line in France, died at his home, 1730 North Fair Oaks Avenue, Pasadena, California, July 10, 1924, after a brief illness.

Besides his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Isabel Doan of St. Louis, General Erwin is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Ned R. Rehkopf of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Edward J. Walsh of St. Louis; Mrs. A. B. Tinning of Martinez, California; a son, James Erwin, of Pasadena; a step-son, G. D. Borup, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and a brother-in-law, George P. Doan, of Pasadena.

General Erwin was born in Savannah, Georgia, July 11, 1856, a son of Robert Erwin and Mary Ann Gallaudet. Educated in his native city, he matriculated at Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, at the age of 16. He was graduated from the U. S. M. A., Class of 1880, when he was promoted in the army as a Second Lieutenant, 4th Cavalry.

His first duty after graduation was on frontier duty at Fort Hayes, Kansas, and later he was on scouting duty in Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico. His large variety of service includes duty in the Geronimo campaign, service in the Northwest and as Superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park. When the Spanish War broke out he went to the Philippines and was in service off and on for seven years in the islands.

When trouble came on the border he went with General John J. Pershing into Mexico. On the first rush into Mexico they marched 24 hours at a stretch. General Erwin, as commander of the 7th Cavalry, was mentioned for special bravery in pursuit of Villa. He was in the engagement with the Villa troops, in an all-day fight, when after being wounded Villa escaped to the mountains.

During the great earthquake and fire in San Francisco in 1906 General Erwin, then a Colonel, was in charge of the relief supplies and rendered the most efficient service.

When the United States entered the World War he was made a temporary Brigadier General, and was placed in command of the 12th Infantry Brigade, 6th Division, Regular Army, with the A. E. F. He was awarded the D. S. M. for "exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services in positions of great responsibility", the official citation says:

BRIGADIER GENERAL JAMES BRAILSFORD ERWIN

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM AUGUSTINE BURNS, JR.

"With sound technical skill, initiative and untiring energy, he assisted in the organization and training of the 6th Division, and commanded with distinction the 12th Infantry Brigade during its operations in the Vosges Sector and during the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, November 1 to 11, 1918. His rare quality of leadership and unremitting devotion to duty were material factors in the successful operations of his division, contributing markedly to the accomplishments of the American Expeditionary Forces in France."

General Erwin was also awarded the Croix de Guerre, with palm and star.

At the time of his death he was president of the West Point Association of California, treasurer of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Pasadena, and member of the Midwick Club. As a member of the local American Legion post he worked indefatigably for its success.

In 1917 Trinity College gave General Erwin an honorary degree of bachelor of science. He was also a member of the Iota Kappa Alpha fraternity. He was a graduate of the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth.

General Erwin was retired from active service, for age, July 11, 1920. Funeral services were held July 12, 1924, from St. Mark's Church, following prayers at the house. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Albert Hall, rector of St. Mark's.

WILLIAM AUGUSTINE BURNS, JR.

No. 6859. Class of 1922.

Died, July 19, 1924, at El Paso, Texas, aged 24 years.

William Augustine Burns, Jr., was born at Rockville Center, Long Island, July 2, 1900, and was appointed to the Military Academy from the 1st District of New York.

From his broad smile to his bow legs he was every inch a likeable plebe. As the corps grew to know him better, his popularity increased. Chevrons never passed him by, rather it seemed that with each shakeup of the make list Willie floated nearer to the top. As Captain of L Company for two years he displayed marked ability in organization and leadership. His company reflected his buoyant spirit.

The diamond and the gridiron, too, paid tribute to Willie's prowess. He covered the ground around the second sack like a professional and the enemy pitchers dreaded to have him coaching at third base.

Burns graduated in the Field Artillery and was assigned to Battery E of the 12th at Camp Travis, Texas. His service at San Antonio gave promise of a brilliant army career. His disposition was magnetic.

There never was a time that he did not have a broad smile and a cheerful word for everyone. He took part in the regimental athletics. He was a good horseman and an able artillery commander.

In the summer of 1923 Burns was transferred to Fort Bliss, Texas, and assigned to the 82nd Field Artillery for duty. He was married to Miss Adelheit Feisenmeier of Baltimore in the fall of 1923. His year at Fort Bliss increased his circle of friends both in the service and out.

While practicing for the Division Horse Show, his horse fell over a jump. Burns was injured internally and taken to the post hospital. It was thought that the injuries would not be fatal and for two weeks he continued to show improvement. While sitting up in bed talking with his wife and parents he suffered a sudden relapse and the end came quickly.

It is difficult to express the void left by the passing of Willie Burns. His true friendship, his sunny disposition, coupled with his marked ability as a soldier and a leader, left him in a class alone. No one can quite fill his place. But his memory will be cherished by his classmates. May their testimony lessen the load of sorrow that his wife and infant son, born after his father's death, must bear.

A CLASSMATE.

HENRY OLCOT SHELDON HEISTAND

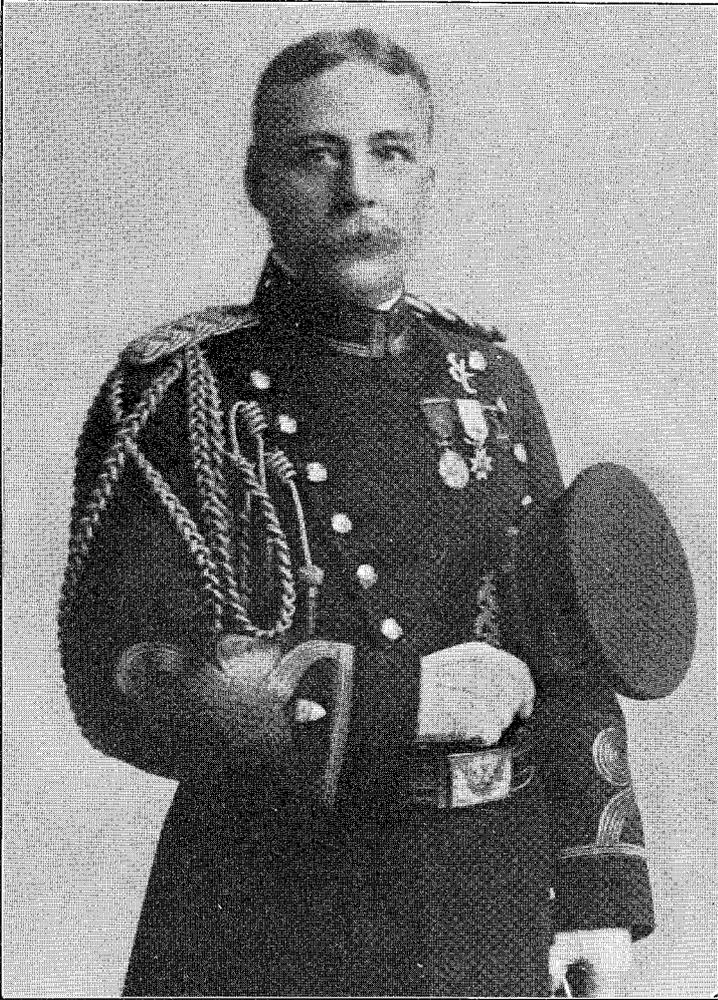

No. 2745. Class of 1878.

Died, August 8, 1924, at Washington, D. C., aged 68 years.

Henry Olcot Sheldon Heistand was born in Richwood, Ohio, April 30, 1856. His father, his grandfather and his great grandfather were Methodist ministers. His character and his ability entitled him to follow in their footsteps, but he chose instead to serve his country.

His early education was limited to that offered by the grammar school of the town. But he was naturally studious and was fortunate in having an exceptionally well qualified teacher, Mr. Wilber Ferguson, a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University. Mr. Ferguson was so thorough in his methods that Heistand gave him credit for laying the foundation of all his later success.

At the age of sixteen, he himself began teaching in a district school. For two years he taught, while working at night in a drug store and studying medicine, hoping to follow in his father's profession, his father having been a physician before he went into the ministry. Here he read one day of a competitive examination due three days later for a vacancy in the Military Academy. He presented himself with twelve others and there won his appointment. This short notice in the daily paper changed his whole later life.

COLONEL HENRY OLCOTT SHELDON HEISTAND

He entered the Military Academy on September 1, 1874. Upon graduation he was assigned as an Additional Second Lieutenant to the 11th Infantry, in which regiment he had all of his line service. While on graduation leave, on September 19, 1878, he married Mary Jane Rippey of Delaware, Ohio. His groomsmen were three classmates, J. Franklin Bell, James S. Pettit and Nat W. Phisterer, Bell being his best man.

His first station was on the frontier at Fort Custer, Montana. Almost immediately he was sent out in command of a detachment from his regiment to build a telegraph line from Fort Custer to Helena, Montana. On one occasion on this expedition, being unable to make camp near wood during a blizzard, the party was forced to use some of its stores for fuel. During a part of the time they had no salt. What fresh meat they had they got with their rifles. All the party suffered from frost bite during the winter.

The following year, 1879, he was Quartermaster of the column that left Camp Custer and established Camp Poplar River near the Fort Peck Indian agency. This command marched to the site, went into temporary camp, built its own quarters and store houses from timber that the men cut down nearby, in the depth of a Montana winter. His wife accompanied him on this expedition, as she did on all of his moves except when he was in the field against the hostile Indians.

In 1881 he took the field as Quartermaster for the large command that was gathered for the Sitting Bull Campaign.

Other frontier posts at which he was stationed were Fort Abraham Lincoln and Fort Yates, Dakota, and Whipple Barracks, Arizona. He also served for a time in the East at Fort Ontario and Fort Niagara, New York.

His close association with the Indians on the frontier, in garrison and in campaign, combined with his keen observation, made him one of our foremost authorities on Indian affairs. His wife also profited by her experiences. Her many interesting stories of the Indians and of the military forces on the frontier have been widely read.

Like all the junior line officers of his time, it fell to his lot, owing to the scarcity of staff officers, to perform the duties of Quartermaster, Commissary, Ordnance, Engineer and Signal Officer—sometimes all of these duties at the same time. His industry and ability in these staff duties, as well as his proper duties, gained him frequent commendatory notice from his superiors. He was noted for his zeal and good judgment in the performance of all of his duties. He set for himself a high standard early in life and lived up to it, earning quickly the reputation that brought him honor in his later years.

His attention to his military duties did not prevent his taking part heartily in the sports available to frontier garrisons of early days. He spent long days in the open hunting and fishing. He was particularly expert with shot gun and rifle, a medallist in department competition. At this time, building on the strong constitution that he had inherited, he laid the basis of the good health that carried him through the confining duties of his later service. A clean life and exemplary habits contributed in no small amount to his good health.

He was a man of unusual attainments in literature and art, being one of that small group of gifted artists that is numbered among the graduates of the Military Academy. These and other outside interests were his diversion. His writings on military, patriotic and public questions were numerous and widely published. Among them were a book on Alaska and numerous book reviews. As a public speaker, too, his services were in constant demand at military and civil gatherings. He was a steward in his church and a trustee of the American University in Washington. Another of his interests, and to him one of the most important, though little known even to his most intimate friends, was the obtaining of employment for discharged and retired enlisted men. All these activities were carried on in addition to the ever increasing load of his military duties. His personal correspondence incident to them was enormous.

His discretion, his loyalty to the Government and his superiors, and his diplomatic handling of public affairs soon earned him the confidence of his associates. As a consequence he was frequently entrusted with delicate and important Government missions, all of which he terminated with great success.

Following many years of service with his regiment, most of which had been spent west of the Mississippi River, he was appointed Military Aide to Mr. McKinley, then Governor of Ohio. Upon Mr. McKinley's nomination to the Presidency, Heistand was appointed his confidential secretary. When Mr. McKinley assumed his position as President the Heistands moved to Washington, where the then Captain Heistand was placed on duty in the Secretary of War's office as Military Aide to the President. The close friendship of the McKinleys and the Heistands terminated only with the death of President McKinley and his wife.

In the Fall of 1898, being still on duty in Washington, he was appointed Aide to President Sanford Dole of the Hawaiian Islands, then with a party on an official visit to the United States. He met them in Chicago, escorted them to Washington, and was in charge of the extensive entertainment accorded the party for two weeks, including a reception at the White House.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he was appointed Adjutant General of the 2nd Army Corps. Upon his relief from this duty he was appointed Military Attaché to the American Embassy in France under General Horace Porter. His duties included those of American Military Attaché to the Paris Exposition. During his tour of duty at the French capital he secured permission to fly the American flag from the top of the Eifel Tower during the celebration of the Fourth of July by the American colony in Paris, a courtesy that had never been accorded before to any nation. Surely no soldier was ever more loyal to or loved his flag more than he. During this celebration, General Porter, the ambassador, addressed an enormous gathering in the Place de la Concorde.

While in Paris he received orders to join the China Relief Expedition. He joined by the shortest route, through the Suez Canal. He served throughout this campaign as General Chaffee's Chief of Staff.

There followed a short tour of home service in Washington and San Francisco, after which he went again on foreign service as Adjutant General of the North Philippines, and later as Adjutant General of the Philippine Department. He had now reached the rank of Colonel in the Adjutant General's Department.

He returned home to serve as Adjutant General of the Division of the Atlantic and of the Department of the East. Another tour of foreign service soon followed, again as Adjutant General of the Philippines Division. Upon his return from what was to be his last tour of foreign service he went to Washington, where for a time he acted as Adjutant General of the Army. He then went to Chicago as Adjutant General of the Central Department. He was on this duty when the United States entered the World War.

His next station was Camp Grant, Illinois, where as Camp Adjutant and Adjutant of the 86th Division, he organized the administrative forces required for these two commands. He carried on the administration of these two offices with thousands of drafted men passing through, without friction. His ability as organizer and administrator were never more fully tried or more fully demonstrated.

As his failing health prevented his going overseas, he returned to the Central Department. A few months later, at the request of General Barry who was commanding the Department of the East, he was transferred as Adjutant General to that department with station at Governor's Island, New York. There he was retired on April 30, 1920, after forty-six years of service, having reached the statutory age for retirement.

He plunged immediately into Red Cross work in New York City as it irked him to be idle for a moment. While in the midst of this work, one year later, he was struck down by the illness that later was to become fatal.

During the last two weeks of his illness he passed into long periods of unconsciousness as he became weaker and weaker. Rousing himself for a short time the day before he died, he reaffirmed his faith in his Maker and bade his wife goodbye.

He died on August 8, 1924, in Washington, and lies in Arlington Cemetery. So passed away one of the most loyal sons of the Academy, a high-minded American citizen and a sincere Christian gentleman.

ALBERT HILANDS ACHER

No. 4759. Class of 1909.

Died, August 26, 1924, at Lake Forest, Illinois, aged 39 years.

Albert Hilands Acher, the son of Albert M. and Annetta (Hilands) Acher, was born at Greenville, Pennsylvania, on June 6, 1885. Both his parents belonged to families locally well known and respected; his maternal grandfather was one of the first to enlist for the Civil War. In his early childhood the family moved to Canada for a few years, returning to Pennsylvania when he was ten years old. He attended the public schools in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, and Grove City, Pennsylvania.

After one year at the Grove City College, young Acher was nominated to a cadetship at the United States Military Academy from the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania District by Representative Joseph R. Sibley, having been selected from a large number of candidates after a competitive examination. He entered in 1905 and took a high rank both in his military duties and his academic work. He sang in the choir, having a good and well-trained bass voice and marked musical ability. He was devoted to fencing with the sabre, that being the athletic activity which he favored beyond all others. By the time he reached his first class year he was one of the best sabre men in the Corps, and would undoubtedly have represented the Academy in intercollegiate sabre competitions, had such been held then as they are now. As a first class man he was detailed for duty with the new cadets and was made a Cadet Lieutenant. He was graduated in 1909 and commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers.

After short tours of instruction on the Isthmus of Panama and in important engineer districts in the United States, Lieutenant Acher served as student at the Engineer School of Application and with the Battalion of Engineers at Washington Barracks, D. C., until the spring of 1912, when he was assigned to duty on the Canal Zone under the Isthmian Canal Commission. He worked for a few months as Junior Engineer in the Light House Subdivision and was then transferred as

COLONEL ALBERT HILANDS ACHER

Assistant Engineer to the Fortification Division, of which he was in charge during his last nine months on the Isthmus. In July, 1915, he returned to the United States and was for two years Assistant in the U. S. Engineer District with headquarters at Los Angeles, California, his principal duty being the planning and building of seacoast batteries at Fort Rosecrans and San Pedro, California. He then served for a short time as Adjutant of the 4th Regiment of Engineers. This was followed by six months' duty in charge of the Seattle, Washington, Engineer District, from which he was relieved in December, 1917, and sent again to the 4th Regiment of Engineers, with a temporary commission as Major. As the regiment was preparing for overseas service in the near future, this change gave him great satisfaction.

The regiment was assigned to the 4th Division and went to France in the spring of 1918, arriving in Bordeaux on May 12. Major Acher was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel of Engineers in the temporary forces on February 14 and August 1, 1918, respectively. In command of his regiment and as Division Engineer of the 4th Division, he took part in the Second Battle of the Marne, July 18 to 23; in the Vesle River Campaign, August 3 to 12; in the St. Mihiel Offensive, September 12 to 16; and in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, September 26 to October 10, 1918. He was then transferred to the 102d Engineers as Commander and also assigned as Division Engineer of the 27th Division; in these capacities he took part in the operations of the Second American Army Corps with the British Fourth Army under General Sir Henry Rawlinson until the Armistice on November 11, 1918. These operations included forcing La Selle River and driving the enemy back to the line of the Sambre Canal.

After the Armistice, Colonel Acher was detached from the 27th Division before its return to the United States and was assigned as Chief of the Italian Division of the War Damage Section of the American Commission to Negotiate Peace. On the conclusion of this duty, he closed up the affairs of the Light Railways of the American Expeditionary Forces, which occupied him until his return to the United States in June, 1919. He was then placed on duty in the office of the Chief of Engineers, U. S. A., in Washington, D. C., where he remained until he resigned from the army on November 6, 1919, with the rank of Colonel in the temporary forces and Captain in the Regular Army.

During his service in the army, Colonel Acher earned in all his duties the commendation of his superior officers, and the admiration and respect of those who worked under him. General Goethals said of his work on the Isthmus:

"It soon became apparent that, combined with a pleasing personality, he possessed unusual ability and those rare and unmistakable qualities that constitute a leader. Were I to name certain of these that, to me, stood out above others in this connection I should mention his intelligence, fairness, frankness, loyalty, willingness to assume and carry responsibility, and his ability to handle men. I can speak with authority and feeling of his work on the Canal for I had many opportunities to observe it first hand and it never failed to measure up to the highest standard. I always found him very energetic, bright, quick in thought and action, possessing good judgment and good hard common sense; firm, yet fair in all his dealings; conscientious, painstaking; kind, generous and thoughtful of others; and, above all, intensely human. These same qualities I have heard mentioned by those having knowledge of his services in France during the World War, and they account for the success which he subsequently attained in civil life. He won and held the confidence, respect and admiration of all with whom he came in contact."

He was highly commended by General W. L. Sibert, then in command of the South Pacific Coast Artillery District, for the economy and speed with which he had built certain important seacoast batteries. The Commander of the 4th Division, A. E. F., in recommending him for the Distinguished Service Medal, wrote that:

"During the operations of the Vesle River, the 4th Engineers, under the command of Colonel Acher, and inspired by his personal example, distinguished itself by building numerous bridges across that river under heavy artillery, machine gun and rifle fire, and building other bridges as soon as these were destroyed. During the Meuse-Argonne Campaign, Colonel Acher planned, supervised and completed the construction of the road from the Town of Esnes to Malancourt, a task of such vital importance to the success of the American forces that without it the campaign would inevitably have been brought to a halt. This work involved the construction of a new road over the base of what four years before had been a road, but which had been torn to pieces by the shell fire of both the Germans and the French. Work was started at 9:30 P. M. and accomplished at 2:00 P. M. on the following afternoon. Between these hours two miles of road was built by four companies of Engineers, 40,000 sand bags being used. The road later became one of the two main arteries of transport of two Army Corps. It was due entirely to Colonel Acher's foresight in planning the amount and character of supplies necessary and arranging the order and distribution of his forces that this road was built and the bridges over the Ruisseau de Forges were completed in ample time for the passage of the artillery and trains.

"Colonel Acher is a natural leader of men and has implanted in the 4th Engineers a spirit of helpfulness and an esprit de corps that makes the organization not only a most efficient technical unit, but a highly trained combat unit as well. During the three major operations in which the regiment has participated, Colonel Acher has, regardless of his own safety, exposed himself to hostile fire at all points where organizations of his regiment were working, and by his personal courage has been an inspiration to his men."

Another of the Commanders of the 4th Division, himself an ex-Infantryman, stated, in reporting on Colonel Acher's efficiency, that:

"I consider him the best Engineer Officer I have ever known. I feel also that he would make an excellent infantry commander in war.

"By his good judgment, energy and zeal, he made the advance of the 4th Division possible in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He holds a peculiar control and influence over officers and soldiers under him, which increases manifold their efficiency."

Another of the Commanders of the 4th Division writes:

"Acher took command of the regiment before its first action under fire. The Division owed him much. Not only was he an excellent executive and administrator, but he had the faculty of looking ahead, so that when movements were projected it was usually found that he had already begun preparations.

"His loyalty and spirit of service I have never seen excelled. His strongest characteristic was directness in thought and speech. Quick to apprehend, he made prompt, direct answers to questions and equally prompt, sound, practical decisions. To hesitate, to consider trifles, or to move in anything but a straight line to his object was wholly foreign to his nature. Personally, we were all devoted to him."

The Commanding General of the 27th Division writes that the 102d Engineers, under Colonel Acher's command, did exceptionally fine work in the assault on La Selle River and the heights beyond, and that,

"Colonel Acher combined with a splendid technical and professional preparation for regimental command a disposition and human attitude toward his men which soon won their confidence and affection."

In a formal letter to the American Corps Commander the Commanding General of the British Fourth Army expressed his thanks for and his appreciation of the excellent work done by the 102d and 105th Regiments of Engineers, under the command of Colonel Acher and Colonel J. H. Pratt, respectively.

For his "exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services" as commanding officer of the 4th Engineers and, later, of the 102d Engineers, Colonel Acher was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by the Commander-in-Chief of the A. E. F., in the name of the President.

After leaving the army, Colonel Acher's career was very successful; such as to reflect credit on the Military Academy and to strengthen the belief that the training given there is broad enough to form a good foundation for activities in peaceful as well as warlike fields. He held for a year the position of Chief Engineer of the U. S. Food Products Corporation, and then took part in the organization of an engineering and contracting company which specialized in the construction of forms for reinforced concrete, and did a large and growing business. He was actively engaged on the operations of this company and on plans which he had almost perfected for extending such operations materially, when he was taken ill in the early summer of 1924. The illness, at first apparently trivial, developed serious features and terminated fatally on August 26, 1924.

Although separated from the Regular Army, Colonel Acher recognized always his obligation to do his part in the defense of the country when needed and held, at the time of his death, a commission as Colonel in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Colonel Acher made his home in Lake Forest, Illinois. He was married in 1913 to Frances, daughter of General and Mrs. H. F. Hodges. His widow and three daughters survive him.

In his private life Colonel Acher was devoted to his family, loyal to his friends and very generous, finding his own chief pleasure in giving pleasure to others. In his professional life he showed himself a man of great energy and force of character, straightforward and direct in his dealings, holding fast to his own purpose, but uniformly fair toward his competitors as well as his associates. The men employed in his work were sure of just and considerate treatment at his hands and all looked on him with admiration, respect and affection. They felt his death as a personal loss. He was a capable and successful engineer, a brave and distinguished soldier. His early death ended a career of unusual achievement and more unusual promise.

MUNROE McFARLAND

No. 3269. Class of 1888.

Died, September 3, 1924, at Los Angeles, California, aged 57 years.

On that hot June 15th of 1884 he trudged up the long hill with the rest of us, slim, slight and fair—the youngest of us all, but even then showing those fine characteristics of conscience, loyalty and duty which we who served with him were for so many years to continually observe and ceaselessly admire.

Munroe McFarland was a native of Baltimore, Maryland, born June 28, 1867, the son of Cyrus Dodd McFarland, a prominent attorney of that city. He was of that branch of the American McFarlands which traces its ancestry back through the Revolutionary period to the landing of Daniel McFarland at Marblehead, Massachusetts, in 1718. Munroe's boyhood was spent in Baltimore, where he attended the schools there available and came to West Point just before his seventeenth birthday, scarcely prepared to undergo the rigors of Colonel Bass' requirements in Davies' "Legendre" and Church's "Spherical Trig". He scented danger during much of his plebe year, but pulled through, and advanced to heights of glory with Church's "Analytics" and "Shades and Shadows". His cadet service was filled with hard work and conscientious endeavor. He was indeed earnest all the time, a model in conduct, never offending, and with a good will toward all that endured throughout his life.

Upon graduation on June 11th, 1888, he chose the infantry branch of the service, "The Queen of Battles", and at the end of a happy graduation leave joined the 21st for frontier duty at old Fort Sidney, Nebraska. There in the Indian country he began his career as a commissioned officer of the army. Subsequently he passed to the higher grades in the Regular Army, being promoted First Lieutenant of the 13th Infantry, July 5, 1895; Captain, 18th Infantry, March 26, 1899; Major, 29th Infantry, March 10, 1911; Lieutenant Colonel of Infantry, July 1, 1916; and Colonel, May 15, 1917.

COLONEL MONROE McFARLAND

In 1893 he was ordered as a student officer at the Infantry and Cavalry School, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, graduating in 1895; and was Regimental Adjutant, 13th Infantry, from May, 1897, to March, 1899. He served in Cuba during the Spanish-American War from June until August, 1898, participating in the Battle of San Juan, July 1, 1898, followed by the siege and surrender of Santiago. In the Philippine Islands from April, 1899, to September, 1901, he participated in engagements near Guadaloupe Ridge, June 10, 1899; and was in the trenches about Manila to August 10, 1899, in the Battle of Ilaya and Pavia, and in the campaign through the Island of Panay and the assault on Romblon.

He was assigned as Military Governor of the Province of Romblon, December 16, 1899, and served in this capacity until May 2, 1900. He returned to the United States and remained for three years, then going again to the islands where he served from 1903 to 1905. He was a student officer at the Army War College, October, 1907, to October, 1908; a Major of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry from October 12, 1908, to August 22, 1910. He went to Bulgaria and Servia as Military Observer for the United States Army, during the Balkan Wars of 1912-1913, and was in the field with the Balkan armies and in Sofia and Salonika on this interesting duty. On September 11, 1913, he was detailed as a member of the General Staff serving in the War College in Washington, and in charge of the then important work of Military Intelligence at San Antonio during the threatened trouble with Mexico.

On December 17, 1917, he was appointed Brigadier General of the National Army, and February 19, 1918, joined the 162nd Brigade of the 81st Division at Camp Jackson, South Carolina. He served there and at Camp Sevier, South Carolina, and Camp Mills, New York, sailing for France with his brigade on July 31, 1918. In active service during many engagements from early in September until the Armistice, he commanded his brigade against the Germans in the St. Die Sector, September 22 to October 20, and in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, Somme Dieu Sector, November 5 to 11, 1918. He had a brigade of which he was proud and sailed with it from St. Nazaire, homeward bound, on June 5, 1919.

He was returned to the grade of Colonel on July 15, 1919, and assigned to the command of Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Missouri, where he remained until February 15, 1921, when transferred to take command of the Intermediate Supply Depot at Chicago.

He was again at the Army War College from 1921 to 1922, but was in ill health during the latter part of the course and obtained leave of absence in July. On November 7, 1922, he retired from active service at his own request after over 38 years of service. A few weeks were spent in Buffalo while he was arranging his personal affairs in the East and preparing to go with his family to Los Angeles, where he had decided to make his home. He purchased a house on De Grandpre Avenue, Hollywood, and was enjoying a new freedom of life. But scarcely was his home settled when his heart began to fail and "the time of his unmooring" was at hand. On September 3, 1924, in peace and happiness and surrounded by his family, Munroe McFarland passed on from this shore to the land of the great beyond.

He was devoted, loving, considerate and dutiful as son and brother, and as husband and father. For many years during his early career, his mother and two sisters shared his army home. He is survived by his wife, who was Frances Ogilvie of Buffalo, and by his two daughters, Jean and Ruth.

His service to his country was loyal and efficient. He was a conscientious soldier, unassuming and unpretending, not looking for the limelight—not caring for the things that show but the things that count. His satisfaction was in fulfilling each responsibility, in doing each daily task in a manly and soldierly way and more than accomplishing the mere requirements of orders and regulations. Modest to a fault, he yet possessed the virtues that stood out and made him endeared and honored to both his seniors and his juniors. He loved his Alma Mater and often thought of West Point and its influence on his life; in fact, he embodied to a marked degree the West Point motto of:

"Duty well performed, Honor e'er untarned."

"To every man there openeth
A Way, and Ways, and a Way,
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A High Way, and a Low.
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go."

"Munnie" took the High Way. And his soul shall go on; and he shall live with us, an example of gentleness and kindness and helpfulness, and we shall always think of him as our good comrade and companion—such a man we are proud to take by the arm and say,

"Behold my Friend."

He left shortly thereafter for the Philippines, where he remained until March, 1915, at which time he returned to the States and was assigned to duty on the Border at Douglas, Arizona, with the 11th Infantry. When the World War broke out he went to Chattanooga, Tennessee, and later to Spartanburg, South Carolina, with the 54th Infantry. Here he organized the Train Headquarters and the Military Police for the 6th Division. Upon completion of this very important duty he was transferred to the 601st Infantry (later re-named the 601st Pioneer Infantry) and sailed for France with this regiment in September, 1918. He saw service with the 601st Infantry on the Aisne Front from Chateau Thierry to Chemin des Dames. After the Armistice he returned to the States as Division Adjutant of the 92nd Division and was then assigned on demobilization work with the 5th Infantry at Camp Taylor, Kentucky. He later served as Commanding Officer of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps Unit at the Miami Military Institute, then at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and at Camp Dix, New Jersey. In September, 1922, he was assigned to duty as a Student Officer at the General Service Schools, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He graduated from the Command and General Staff Schools in 1923 and was then assigned to duty in connection with the organized Reserves in the 6th Corps Area. He died at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, on September 17, 1924, while on this latter duty.

Major Kern married Edith Dent, daughter of Colonel John C. Dent, U. S. Army, retired.

From his cadet days he endeared himself to all his associates in the military service by his genial good humor and pleasing personality. He had the ability to make friends wherever he went and his untimely death is mourned by all who had the good fortune to know him. He possessed a cheerful demeanor even under the most trying circumstances and was never known to have become disheartened. His superior officers spoke of him as a very conscientious, efficient and loyal officer, conspicuous by his zealous devotion to duty. By his untimely death the service lost one of its most promising officers, his associates a true friend and his wife a loving husband.

HARRY COUPLAND BENSON

No. 2938. Class of 1882.

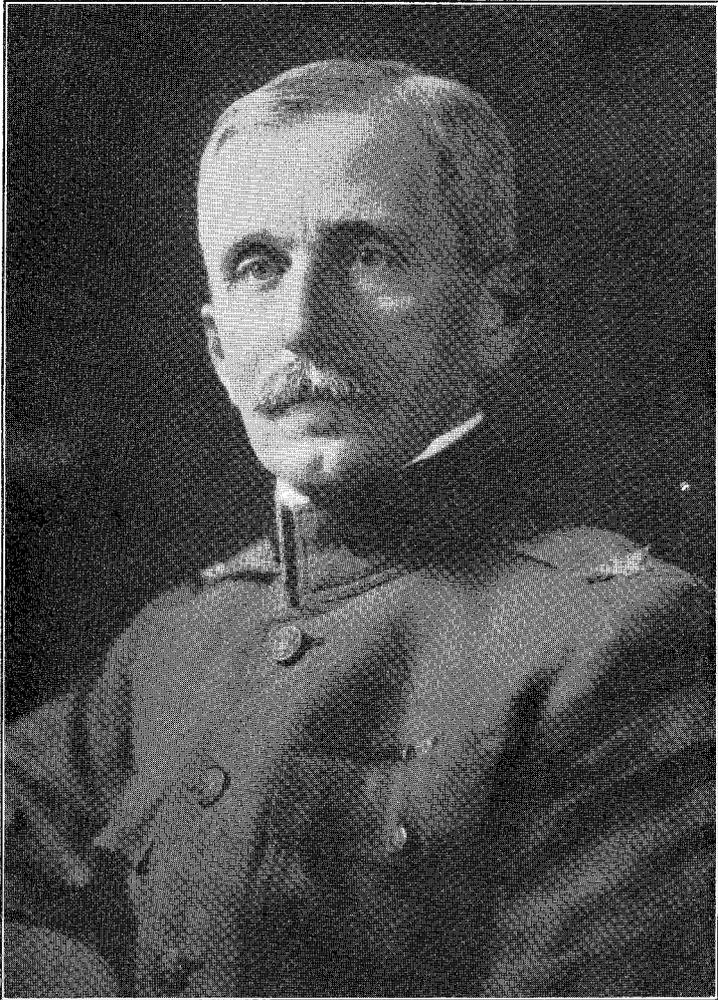

Died, September 21, 1924, at San Francisco, California, aged 66 years.

Colonel Harry C. Benson was born at Gambier, Ohio, December 8, 1857. He was the son of the Reverend Edward C. Benson, Professor of Latin in Kenyon College and graduated from that college in 1877 with the degree of A.B. He was a Phi Beta Kappa man and a member of the Psi Upsilon fraternity. In 1887 Kenyon College conferred upon him the degree of M.A.

He was the husband of Mary Breeze Benson, who survives him, and the father of First Lieutenant Thomas Mardenbro Benson, retired, whose death in 1922 was directly due to illness contracted in the field in France.

Colonel Benson was connected with the military establishment for more than forty-six years. He entered the United States Military Academy, July 1, 1878, and was graduated June 13, 1882, standing No. 7 in a class of 37 members. He was then appointed a Second Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Artillery; was transferred to the 4th Cavalry, January 31, 1884; promoted to the grade of First Lieutenant, March 4, 1888, and to that of Captain, November 21, 1897. The war with Spain occurring soon after, he was made an Inspector General in the volunteer forces with the rank of Major, May 12, 1898, and served in that capacity until May 12, 1899. He reached the grade of Major in the 13th Cavalry of the Regular Army, October 20, 1905; was transferred to the 14th Cavalry, January 12, 1906, and to the 5th Cavalry, October 27, 1908, and was promoted to the grade of Lieutenant Colonel in the latter regiment, August 11, 1911. He was a member of the General Staff Corps from July 31, 1912, to October 14, 1914, and had become a Colonel of Cavalry on September 27, 1914.

After performing garrison duty in California for a short time (1882 to 1884) he was on frontier duty in the field in New Mexico and Arizona from July, 1884, to June, 1887. He then became Instructor of Mathematics at the Military Academy, in August, 1887, and filled that position for the four years ending in August, 1891. Later the appointment of Regimental Quartermaster was tendered to him but he declined it and served at Walla Walla, Washington, at the Sequoia National Park, the Presidio of San Francisco and the Round Valley Indian Agency, up to January, 1893, when he was placed on duty at Chicago, under the Department of State, in connection with the World's Fair at that place. Returning to his regiment he saw service at stations in California for nearly five years, ending in June, 1898, when he went to Chickamauga Park, Georgia, where, in the war with

COLONEL HARRY COUPLAND BENSON

Spain, he was Inspector General of the 1st Division, 3rd Corps, from July to October, 1898. He was then Inspector General of the 2nd Division, 4th Corps, at Anniston, Alabama. This position he relinquished in December, 1898, when he became Collector of Customs at Tunas de ZaZa, Cuba, which position he filled until May, 1899. He then was made a member of the commission appointed by Congress to report upon roads and conditions in the Yosemite National Park and served therewith during the four months ending October 31, 1899.

He then went to the Philippine Islands with the 4th Cavalry and served with it there until August, 1901; was then at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, for three years; at the Presidio of Monterey, California, from October, 1904, to April, 1905, and again at Yosemite National Park from April to December, 1905. He was then at Headquarters, Department of California, and at the Presidio of San Francisco for a time, and was Provost Marshal at San Francisco when occupied by troops during the fire there in 1906. Following this he was at the Yosemite National Park and at the Presidio, alternately, the greater portion of 1907 and 1908, but in December of the latter year he became superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park and remained there until October, 1910. In that month his duty took him to Hawaii, and he served at Schofield Barracks until August, 1912. From October, 1912, to October, 1914, he was Chief of Staff of the Philippine Department. Returning to the United States in broken health, he was under treatment and on sick leave of absence until retired at his own request, December 8, 1915, after more than 37 years' service.

Colonel Benson's great vitality and physical endurance were exhibited and commended on many occasions, as were his general efficiency and conscientious performance of duty. He was commended in orders, when still a Lieutenant, for bearing uncomplainingly the most incredible fatigues, privations and dangers in operation against hostile Apache Indians in Arizona and Sonora in 1885 and 1886, and his ride of ninety miles in nineteen hours was commented upon in General Field Orders. In 1899, he was highly commended by his commanders for his services as an Inspector General.

Colonel Benson was an expert marksman and the holder of two medals won in competitions.

He received high praise from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, and from Inspector of Yosemite Park, for his efficiency in the management of that park, and also from the Inspector of the Yellowstone Park.

The following is one of the many tributes paid him for his splendid services in connection with our national parks:

"In the early days of the national parks it took more than ordinary energy, enthusiasm and ability to protect them from depredations and misuse. Moreover, it took courage to face the hostility of men, often powerful and influential, whose selfish interests were thwarted by the withdrawal of the park lands from exploitation. If it had not been for the timely protection afforded by the United States Army our legacy would have come to us seriously impaired. Many officers and men contributed to this valuable service, but Colonel Benson stands pre-eminent among them, not alone because of the long period of his activity in the national parks, but because he also brought to his task a prophetic vision. For more than thirty years he maintained his interest in the parks, and in the later days he beheld the realization of many aspirations."

In the World War Colonel Benson was recalled from the retired list and served actively as Department Adjutant of the Western Department from August, 1917, to April, 1919.

He died at the Letterman General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, California, September 21, 1924.

The foregoing is a brief outline of a long and valuable military service. Failing health, largely or wholly incident to his service, cut short Harry Benson's active career before he had attained the rank and rewards due to his efficiency, character and record. Of outstanding ability, energy and zeal, he threw himself body and soul into anything he undertook, and it is no surprise to those who knew him well that he should bear uncomplainingly "incredible" fatigues, privations and dangers. As he was modest to a fault, the only wonder is that anybody should have heard enough about them to make them the subject of a commendatory order. A typical officer of the "old" army, Benson was imbued with its spirit and ideals. High-minded, courageous, honest, intolerant perhaps of what he considered departures from its code, he was frank and outspoken, while trying always to be just and considerate. It was a passion with him to play the game, whether of life, golf or what not, according to the rules, and it must be admitted that he usually knew the rules better than most people.

In his personal relations Benson was genial, kindly and generous. Alert of mind, interested in people and things, and a student of both nature and books, he was an interesting and delightful companion. He was an ornithologist and discovered a species of quail which the Smithsonian Institution named after him—the Benson quail.

The writer of this brief sketch, a classmate and lifelong friend, not only reveres his memory but will always remember him with sincere admiration and affection as one of the most accomplished officers and finest characters it has been his good fortune to know.

BRIGADIER GENERAL AMOS STICKNEY

AMOS STICKNEY

No. 2022. Class of 1864.

Died, October 25, 1924, at New York City, aged 81 years.

Amos Stickney was born in the old Planters House in St. Louis, Missouri, on August 27, 1843, the son of Benjamin Stickney and Sarah Powers.

The Stickneys originated in Lincolnshire, England, and William Stickney emigrated to America in 1635 and settled in Rowley, Massachusetts. The grandparents of General Stickney were born in Newburyport, Massachusetts, and moved to St. Louis in March, 1837, where General Stickney was born in 1843.

After passing through Wymonds School for Boys in St. Louis, he graduated from Racine College and in 1860 was appointed a cadet to the U. S. Military Academy. He graduated in 1864, while the Civil War was in progress, and was appointed a First Lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers. His first commission was signed by Abraham Lincoln and he often expressed regret that this was stolen from him during one of the campaigns in which he took part. General Stickney participated in a number of actions in the latter part of 1864 and in 1865. He served on General Howard's staff in Sherman's army on its famous march from Atlanta to the sea. He was present at the burning of Columbia, Ga., and noted in an interesting diary that he kept that the burning resulted from an accident and was in no wise due to vandalism as has been claimed. General Stickney was promoted by brevet to the grades of Captain and Major for zeal and efficiency in the discharge of his duties in the Army of the Tennessee during the campaigns of Georgia and the Carolinas. He was promoted to Captain in 1867, Major in 1881, Lieutenant Colonel in 1893 and Colonel in 1901. In recognition of his Civil War service, he was appointed Brigadier General upon retirement in 1907.

His services from 1865 to 1907, which included the War with Spain, were those of an engineer-officer and largely connected with the works of fortification and of river and harbor improvement. His pronounced efficiency was recognized by all and resulted in his being given various important assignments, including those of member and president of both the Mississippi River Commission and the Missouri River Commission. One of his most important works was the building of the original canal on the Mississippi River at Keokuk, for which he designed all of the machinery and remained in full charge until the canal was completed. In the official account of his services, the following testimonial appears: "Throughout his career, General Stickney held a very high standing as an officer and as an accomplished gentleman, and it was a distinct loss to his branch of the service when he was compelled by law to relinquish the duties for which he was so eminently qualified."

General Stickney was noted among his fellow officers for an unusually charming personality. Although he demanded from his subordinates efficient and conscientious performance of duties, yet he was always very considerate of them. As a consequence, the tasks assigned to his office were always performed in a satisfactory and efficient manner and the administration of them was accomplished smoothly and easily. Socially General Stickney had all the amiable and likeable qualities of a southern gentleman of the old school. He delighted in extending hospitality and many younger officers are greatly indebted for the example set by him in this respect.

General Stickney exemplified in a striking manner the great qualities of the West Point graduates who entered the Engineer Corps. It can be truly said that the Military Academy has reason to be proud of the record left by this gallant, courteous and efficient officer. The guiding principles of his life were Honor, Duty, Country, and there is no blemish upon his record. Through his hands passed millions of Government money appropriated for the river and harbor improvements of the United States, and no question was ever raised as to its proper and wise expenditure. As long as West Point continues to graduate such men, so long will the Congress and the people continue to entrust them with great responsibilities.

FRANK SPEAR ARMSTRONG

No. 3415. Class of 1891.

Died, November 9, 1924, at Manila, Philippine Islands, aged 56 years.

Taps has sounded for "Army" of '91. Born November 18, 1868, at Jeffersonville, Indiana, he reported at the Military Academy June 12, 1887. His living classmates carry the memory of him as a big, strong, happy youngster who then as ever afterward upheld the highest traditions of the Corps. Upright and earnest in all his service, he has left an enviable record.

Upon graduation he joined the 9th Cavalry at Fort Robinson, Nebraska. Having chosen this regiment for his first love, he succeeded in transferring back to it whenever promotion would have taken him elsewhere. He early developed the talents for organization that were born in him and took over besides his troop administration, the duties of Adjutant, Quartermaster, and Post Exchange Officer.

COLONEL FRANK SPEAR ARMSTRONG

He became expert along these lines and was constantly called upon to take over such unwelcome jobs. At Fort Riley, Kansas, he was highly commended by General Godfrey in 1907, for reorganizing the Post Exchange and putting it on a paying basis. Later he was chosen to re-write the Manual for the Quartermaster Corps, which in his masterly hands was simplified and made a standard of reference. His books on Post Exchange and Army Recruiting were valuable additions to service literature.

His great good nature may have led him to respond to the many calls made upon him for administration work, but at heart "Army" was a soldier, a great grandson of that Captain John Armstrong who held one of the original commissions in the Regular Army when it was organized in 1784, and who fought gallantly in many of the early campaigns. One year after graduation "Army" took part in the Rustlers' War in Wyoming, and in 1895 he was in the field against the striking miners at Butte, Montana. He was Aide to Major General Joseph Wheeler in the Spanish-American War and in the Philippines commanded Troop "A", Ninth Cavalry, in action against Insurgents and in several field expeditions.

When the United States entered the World War he was sent over as Chief of the Remount Service in France. This was a job that called for the greatest patience, energy and faithfulness under most exasperating circumstances. "Army" was equal to the occasion.

General Pershing wrote him the following letter:

"Now that hostilities have ceased, it gives me great pleasure to express my thanks to you and the officers and men of the Remount Service for the work that you have accomplished during the war. In spite of insufficient personnel, lack of proper installations, and other handicaps, you have built an organization which can meet all demands made upon it. During the height of operations, the supply of animals was one of the biggest if not the biggest problem in the American Expeditionary Forces. Due to lack of ocean tonnage, it was impracticable to ship horses and mules from the United States. It devolved upon you therefore to scour all France and other European countries for available animals. Through the energy displayed by you and the members of your organization, our troops were supplied with horses and mules and the animal problem was at least in process of solution, if not already solved, when the armistice was signed. In the name of the American Expeditionary Forces, I wish to express my appreciation to the officers and men of your organization."

This was followed by General Pershing's cablegram to the War Department recommending Armstrong's appointment to Brigadier General in the Quartermaster Department.

Colonel Armstrong was then made Chief of the Remount Service in Washington and later sent out to Manila as Department Quartermaster and Superintendent of the Transport Service. These very responsible positions he held until his illness and death at the Sternberg General Hospital.

For his war service he was given the Distinguished Service Medal by his own country and was made in France Officier de l'ordre National de la Legion d'honneur.

He married on August 30, 1894, Jennie, daughter of General E. D. Dimmick and has two sons who survive him.

"Army" was buried in Arlington Cemetery, December 22, 1924, mourned by his classmates and a host of friends.

LEWIS VANCE GREER

No. 4626. Class of 1907.

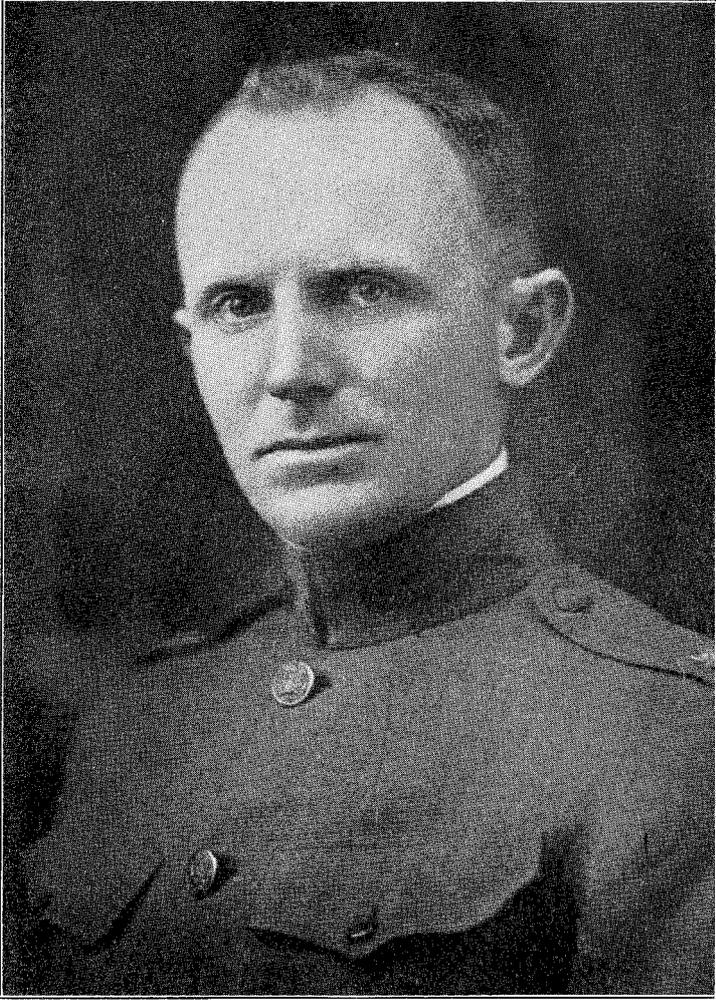

Died, December 29, 1924, at Dallas, Texas, aged 39 years.

West Point has had many worthy and illustrious sons, but never a truer one than Lewis V. Greer. The motto of "Honor, Duty, Country", was peculiarly his and to it he was ever faithful, both in the army and in civil life.

To his classmates of 1907 he was always "Colonel", even from their earliest cadet days, and the title was one of affection and honest admiration. Soft of speech and considerate of others, kindly disposed to all, modest to the point of self-effacement, he was, nevertheless, utterly fearless, bold to the point of daring, and endowed with the highest physical and moral courage. Honor was sacred to him, and so great was his loyalty that a friend's honor was as sacred to him as his own. In the face of such transparent honesty and sincerity, one prized his friendship and none could bear him enmity.

He carried this same high sense of honor and duty into the service, where to him the lightest word of a senior officer was to be respected and followed. How affectionately we recall one occurrence of those days. When his Captain remarked that a certain blatant and insulting bully of the neighborhood needed a good thrashing, Greer quietly hunted up the fellow and gave him one in thorough-going fashion.

Leaving the service for civil life, he returned the instant that he felt his country needed him. It was characteristic of him that he freely offered all that he was capable of giving, yet claimed nothing for himself, entering a training camp with no announcement of his previous training and service, there to remain on a footing of equality with all the rest until recognized by a classmate in the regular service. It was also characteristic of him that he had to be urged to accept a field officer's commission which he deserved, but which he was reluctant to accept because of too great consideration for temporary officers who outranked him at the time.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL LEWIS VANCE GREER

Serving in both France and Germany, he reached the grade of Lieutenant Colonel, Field Artillery, and remained with the colors until the end of the operations, when he again retired to civil life and resumed the practice of law at Dallas, Texas.

As in the army, so also in civil life he made a success in his profession and won the confidence, affection and respect of all with whom he came in contact. The members of the bar of Dallas paid tribute to his memory in the following expressions of appreciation:

"The Dallas Bar lost one of its jewels and we lost a friend and comrade in the death of Lewis Vance Greer. It is appropriate, then, that we, his associates, meet here now to do honor to his memory and recall his virtues.

Lewis V. Greer was born at San Augustine on June 13, 1885, the first son of the late Judge George C. Greer and Margaret Eugenia Greer, who survives him. Receiving his early education in the common schools of San Augustine and Beaumont, Texas, he at an early age entered the University of the South, and it was while a student at Sewanee that upon a competitive examination he received an appointment to West Point Military Academy, from which he was graduated in June, 1907, appointed Second Lieutenant of Cavalry and assigned to the 4th U. S. Cavalry.

While stationed at Denver, Colorado, with the 4th U. S. Cavalry in 1910, he married Muriel J. Millar, who, with their two daughters, Mary Josephine, aged ten, and Margaret, aged seven, survives him.

Lewis Greer performed creditable service with his regiment at Fort Snelling, Minnesota; Fort Meade, South Dakota, at and around El Paso during the troublous times of the Villa Revolution, and at Fort Apache, Arizona. In 1912 he resigned his commission in the army to enter the Law School of the University of Texas, from which he was graduated in 1914. Immediately thereafter he took up the practice of his chosen profession in Dallas, Texas, and in 1915 joined the legal staff of the Magnolia Petroleum Company, with which he was associated until the time of his death.

When his country was plunged into war, Lewis Greer realized the urgent need for men of previous military training, and, ignoring his right to claim any exemption and providing for his wife and children as best he could, he was one of the first to tender his services. In September, 1917, he was promoted to the rank of Major and assigned to the 315th Ammunition Train, with which organization—a unit of the famous 90th Division—he served overseas from July 6, 1918, to June 8, 1919. The valiant service performed by this Division at St. Mihiel and in the Argonne earned promotion for most of its officers, and Lewis Greer came back a Lieutenant Colonel of Field Artillery, but resigned his commission and turned again to the law, the profession he loved so well.

Distinguished as a soldier, he gained even greater distinction as a lawyer. For years his work before the Appellate Courts of this state has been of a very high order, his excellent briefs—models in form, exhaustive in research, powerful and convincing in argument—having won for him the admiration and respect of Bench and Bar alike.

These meager facts but briefly attest the noble character and splendid achievements of our fallen comrade and friend. He needs no towering monument to commemorate his life or brazen tablet to feebly recite his virtues, for he lives in the memory of his fellow man. His familiar form has not been preserved to us in statue of bronze or marble, but his good deeds and manly virtues are engraved upon our hearts.

Our friend is gone, but his benign influence will long remain. His cheerful smile, his pleasing manner, his readiness at all times to perform any service for a friend—and his friends were legion—have endeared him to us all. Brave as a lion when there was need for courage, he was as tender as a maiden in his consideration for the feeling of others. A worthy son of an illustrious sire, an adoring son of his widowed mother, a brave soldier, an able lawyer, a faithful husband, a loving father, a loyal friend, and withal a Christian gentleman, he typified the ideals of the Old South from which he sprang."

CLASSMATE.

EUGENE OSCAR FECHÉT

No. 2236. Class of 1868.

Died, January 15, 1925, at Eustis, Florida, aged 78 years.

In the long life of nearly eighty years that began March 14, 1846, and ended January 15, 1925, Fechét had much variety of occupation, for he enlisted in his sixteenth year in the Volunteer Light Artillery, where he served for nearly three years, going to the Military Academy in 1864 at the age of eighteen, and serving his country in many different ways with honor.

His size, bearing and experience made him a hero to his class, not all of whom had been seasoned to arms. The attrition of competition did not affect the respect in which he was always held.

After graduation, in 1868, he served again the Artillery, but this time in the far west, from Alaska to Nevada, no gentle school; and, like that other disciple of the out of doors, George Washington, he showed a love for recording the results of accurate observation by making surveys. These may have had an influence on his later career, in which the art of using telescopes had an important part.

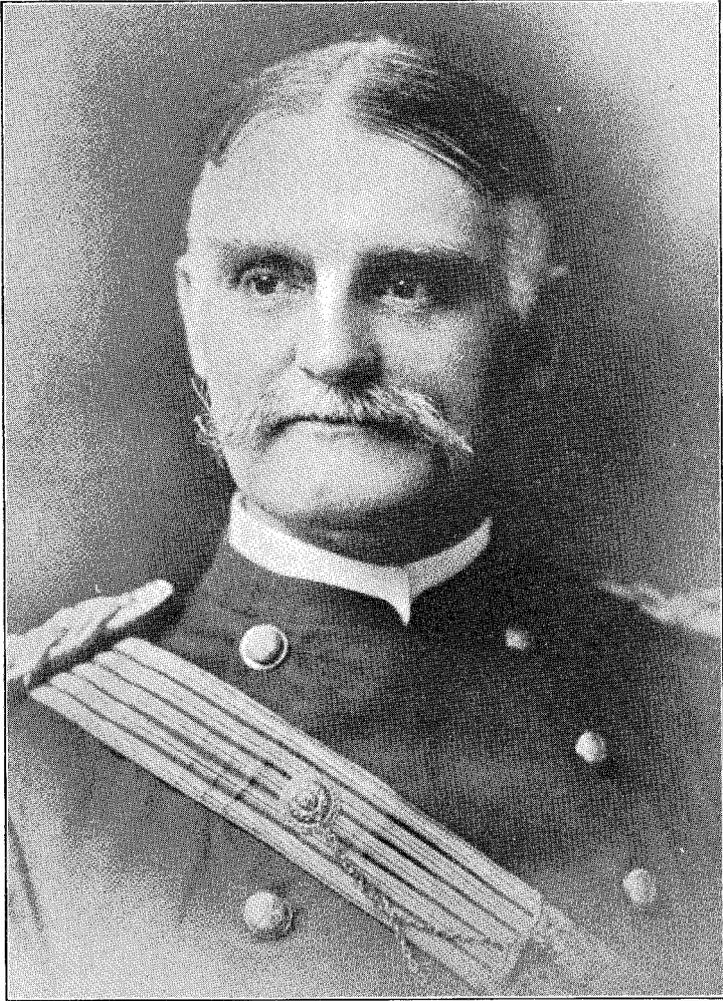

In the early seventies, the future of an American officer was discouraging, so that it is not surprising that in 1872, when the completion of the Suez Canal made it appear a very Pactolus to dry and empty Egypt, Fechét got a long leave to try his fortunes with Rogers, R.M., and others, under General C. P. Stone ("Stone Pacha"). He was much afield surveying in Egypt and the Sudan, but under native rule the revival of Egypt was short lived and even the drab life of the American army seemed acceptable. So the Egyptian episode lasted not much over a year, and our impatient Pegasus came back to earth once more. But only for another year, after which he resigned and tried mining in Venezuela and serving as Consul in Mexico until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War in 1898. Here he fell into rare telescropy for one year, as in the Volunteer Signal Corps, and, until the end, back on regular terra firma.

Having reached his statutory age, he was retired and occupied himself in farming at Eustis, Florida, until his death.

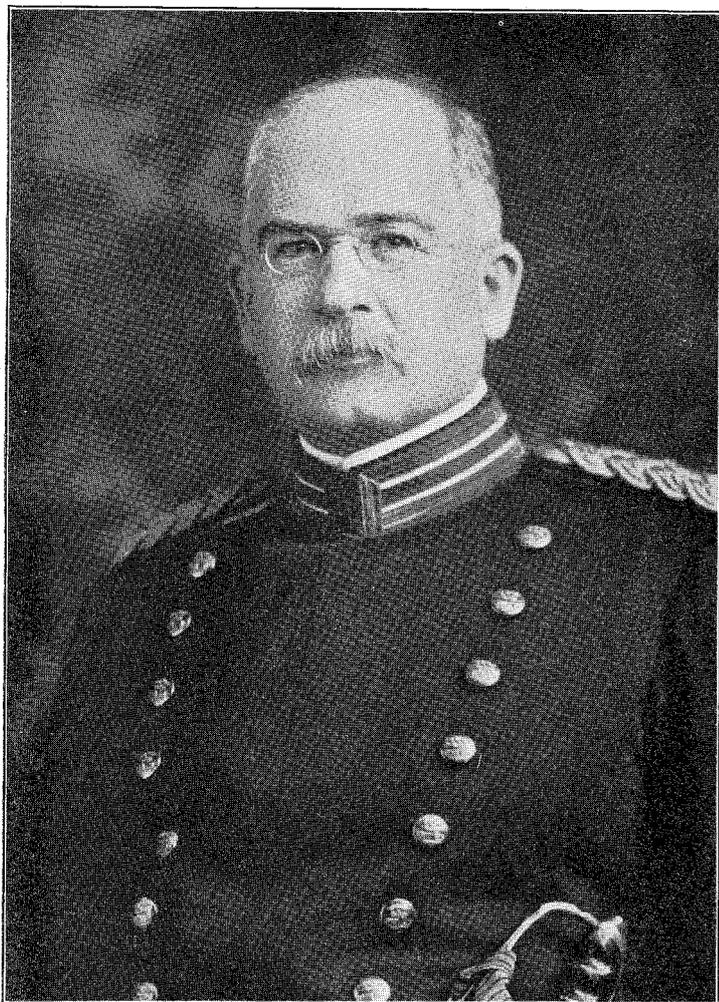

His retirement was illuminated by the distinguished service of his son, Major d'Alary Fechét, of the Infantry, who, in the attack in the Foret de Retz, July, 1918, enabled his regiment to capture more unwounded prisoners than it had men present in action.

So much for his opportunities for service; any other man might have filled these posts without either distinction or disgrace, except for the record made by some scribe at the Judgment of the Dead.

Here is the smelting of the soul, here the boneash of the cupel reveals the quality and weight of character. The nickname, "Sponge

LIEUTENANT COLONEL EUGENE OSCAR FEHÉTY

COLONEL THOMAS LINCOLN CASEY

Staff", given by his classmates fifty-seven years ago, reveals our subject's view of duty. Whether upright or on the level, he was ready for action, either with friend or foe, whether with the soft passage of the effacing sponge or with the crushing blow of the resentful rammer. These were his acts urged by a spirit of equity and honor that made him as forgetful of himself as he was mindful of the country he represented and its cause. This spirit sustained him with mighty wings in the exultation of strife, and lifted him above temptation in the easy ways of peace.

So was he not only an agent, but a type; bearing even to Egypt, where forty arid centuries looked down upon his acts, the Spartan lessons of his distant foster mother, bosomed in verdure on the Hudson's dewy banks.

HENRY METCALFE.

THOMAS LINCOLN CASEY

No. 2761. Class of 1879.

Died, February 3, 1925, at Washington, D. C., aged 67 years.

Thomas Lincoln Casey was born at West Point, New York, February 19, 1857. He was the son of Brigadier General Thomas Lincoln Casey, Chief of Engineers, Class of 1852, and the grandson of Major General Silas Casey, Class of 1826. His mother was Emma Weir, daughter of Robert W. Weir, Professor of Drawing at the U. S. Military Academy from 1824 to 1876.

He received his early education in private schools in Washington, D. C., and as his natural inclination was for a scientific career he entered the Sheffield Scientific College of Yale University in the Class of 1877. Although he made excellent progress in his studies he was not altogether happy there as he felt the call of the service in which so many of his relatives had distinguished careers. At his request his father applied to President Grant for an appointment to West Point, and he entered the Academy as a cadet-at-large, July 1, 1875.

Being well prepared for his work and of unusual ability, he took a high stand in his class from the very beginning and maintained it without great effort to the end. In the cadet battalion he was in succession Corporal, Sergeant and Senior Lieutenant of his company.

On graduation he was assigned to the Corps of Engineers and in the autumn of 1879 he reported for duty at the Engineer and Submarine Mining School at Willet's Point, now Fort Totten, New York. While at this school he made a specialty of theoretical and practical astronomy, which led later to his selection for duty with the expedition to South Africa under Professor Simon Newcomb to observe the transit of Venus in 1882-1883, and to his appointment while still a Lieutenant as a member of the commission to run and mark the boundary lines between a portion of the Indian Territory and the State of Texas.

When not engaged in the above mentioned duties he served as assistant engineer on river and harbor works in various districts along the Atlantic Coast, and was for two years on military duty as Engineer Officer of the Division of the Pacific and Department of California, where one of his duties was that of Inspector of Rifle Practice.

In 1888 he became Captain and was assigned to the river and harbor district of Northeastern New Jersey and at the same time served as a member of the board for testing range finders. In 1894 he was placed in charge of the Norfolk district and was also charged with the construction of the fortifications of Fortress Monroe. He was on this duty at the outbreak of the Spanish War and was placed in charge of the defense of Hampton Roads by submarine mines.

After the Spanish War, having attained his majority, he was assigned to duty on the Mississippi River, first at Vicksburg and later at St. Louis, and was made a member of the Mississippi and Missouri River Commissions. In 1906 he became a Lieutenant Colonel and was assigned as Engineer Secretary of the Lighthouse Board under the Department of Commerce and Labor. His last active duty was as engineer in charge of the Baltimore river and harbor district. On March 1, 1912, upon his own application, he was retired from active duty after more than thirty-five years of service.

Retirement from service did not mean to Colonel Casey a rest from his labors, for he probably never worked harder than during the latter part of his life. It simply meant that he had more time to devote to investigations which he had undertaken in the so-called leisure time of his active career.

He now devoted much of his time to the study and investigation of fossil shells of the southern region, in which he became interested while stationed at Vicksburg. Always deeply interested in the natural sciences, particularly biology, he was an ardent student and prolific writer on the subject of Entomology, confining himself almost wholly to the investigation of Coleoptera. His private collection of the latter was perhaps the largest and most valuable in the country, and according to the terms of his will it is now the property of the U. S. National Museum, Washington, D. C. He wrote many pamphlets and articles on this subject which have appeared in various scientific journals during the past forty years, besides which he himself published eleven 300-500 page volumes, entitled "Memoirs on the Coleoptera". He also wrote many articles for scientific magazines, as well as pamphlets on astronomy, engineering, physics and conchology.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL WILLIAM EUGENE DUNN

He was a life member of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific, the New York Academy of Science, and many other scientific bodies and societies in this country and in Europe. He was a member of the Order of Indian Wars, the Aztec Club of 1847, the Society of Military Engineers, the Cosmos Club of Washington, and of many social clubs in the cities in which he had been stationed.

His naturally strong constitution had been taxed by close study so that an attack of grippe followed by bronchitis resulted in his death. He was buried in the U. S. National Cemetery at Arlington, a number of his own classmates acting as honorary pall bearers.

Colonel Casey is survived by his widow, to whom he was married June 1, 1898. Mrs. Casey was Miss Laura Welsh, daughter of the late Henry D. Welsh of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia.

As was natural from his ancestry, Colonel Casey was not only a scientist and engineer, but he also had well developed tastes for music and painting. His love for the opera was great, and during his Willet's Point days he could be found night after night in the old Academy of Music keenly interested in the great artists of that time. On visiting his quarters he would often be found either with brush and palette, or with his zither or 'cello playing snatches from the last opera he had heard. His greater interest in science alone prevented him from developing these gifts.

Colonel Casey was a most loyal member of the Class of 1879 and welcomed the visits of his classmates who happened to be in Washington on duty or on leave. To them is left the memory of a delightful companion and true friend.

WILLIAM EUGENE DUNN

No. 4652. Class of 1908.

Died, February 8, 1925, at Cresco, Iowa, aged 43 years.

William E. Dunn was born in Iowa, January 1, 1882, and entered the Military Academy from that state, June 15, 1903. Due to a leave of absence granted him because of special family reasons, he graduated with the Class of 1908.

Upon graduation he was assigned to the 3d Field Artillery as a Second Lieutenant and served at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, until June 30, 1910. Detailed as a First Lieutenant, Ordnance Department, he attended the Ordnance School of Application, Sandy Hook Proving Grounds, New Jersey, until March 11, 1911, when he was promoted to First Lieutenant, Field Artillery, and assigned to the 3d Artillery. He served for a year at Fort Sam Houston, and then from 1912 to 1915 in the Philippines, during which latter time he was Government Representative, Court of Land Registration, Philippine Islands, for two years.

Upon returning to the United States he was a student officer at the Field Artillery School of Fire, Fort Sill, Oklahoma, in 1916, receiving his promotion to Captain, 7th Field Artillery, July 1, 1916. He organized a battery at Laredo, Texas, and took it to France, July, 1917, as part of the First Division. He was with this battery at Artillery Training Camp, Valdahon, France, and was with the 1st Battalion, 7th Field Artillery, at the front, October-November, 1917, having been promoted Major, Field Artillery, National Army, August 5, 1917.

He commanded a battalion, 344th Field Artillery, at Camp Travis, Texas, from December, 1917, to September, 1918, being promoted Lieutenant Colonel, Field Artillery, National Army, June 15, 1918. He was assigned to command of the 19th Field Artillery, 5th Division, October, 1918, and served with it in the Puneville Sector. After the armistice he was with the 20th Field Artillery in Luxembourg until the summer of 1919, when he returned to the United States and was assigned to duty with the 2nd Field Artillery at Camp Taylor, Kentucky.

He resigned from the service, November 20, 1919, and was for a time in business in Chicago. Returning to Cresco, Iowa, in order to take care of his aged and infirm parents, he seems to have lost his reason, for there on February 8, 1925, he killed both his parents to relieve their sufferings, and then committed suicide. In view of his superior mental gifts and excellent record in the service his act can be explained only on the ground of temporary insanity.

While an officer in the service he wrote a number of pamphlets, manuals and other works on subjects connected with Field Artillery, which evidenced his capacity, industry and interest in the military profession.

WILLIAM CATHCART BUTTLER

No. 2618. Class of 1876.

Died, March 1, 1925, at Long Beach, California, aged 71 years.

Colonel William C. Buttler was born at New Brunswick, New Jersey, on November 10, 1853, the son of George and Harriet (Van Voorhees) Buttler. His descent was mingled English and Holland Dutch.

COLONEL WILLIAM CATHCART BUTTLER

Buttler spent his youth along the banks of the Raritan River in and around New Brunswick; was graduated from the High School there, and entered West Point July 1, 1872, as a cadet. The trait that marked him all his life first made him known and beloved by all his class—faithful and light hearted.

He was commissioned Second Lieutenant, 3rd Infantry, on June 15, 1876, and spent the next twenty years with that famous regiment. His first service was in and near Mobile, Alabama. From there he went to Montana, serving at Fort Ellis and Fort Missoula, at Fort Meade in South Dakota and at Fort Snelling, Minnesota.

During this period he participated in several Indian campaigns, notably the winter campaign against hostile Sioux in 1891.

He was promoted to First Lieutenant, 3rd Infantry, April 16, 1885, and to Captain, 3rd Infantry, April 25, 1895.

The outbreak of the Spanish-American War found him enjoying a respite from frontier duty, as Military Instructor at Rutgers College in the town of his birth, New Brunswick. After mustering into Federal service all the New Jersey volunteers he proceeded, in 1899, to the Philippines.

In the Philippine Islands from 1899 to 1901 he participated in the Malolos Campaign, being cited in orders by General Lawton for gallantry in action. During this campaign he took an active part in the battles of Morzagara, San Rafael, Baliuag and San Ildefonso.

Promoted to Major of Infantry in 1901, he returned to the States with the 25th Infantry; served with that regiment and with the 22d.

In 1906 he rendered valuable service in San Francisco during the earthquake and fire. Later in 1906 he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, 9th Infantry, and went with that regiment again to the Philippines. This, his second tour in the Philippines, was in marked contrast to his first tour, being served in Manila at Quartel d'Espegne.

Returning to the States in 1907 he served at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, until 1911.

In 1911 he was promoted to Colonel of Infantry and commanded the 4th Infantry at Fort Crook, Nebraska, and the 24th Infantry at Batangas, Luzon, Philippine Islands.

In 1914, after forty years of arduous service, he courteously made way for his juniors by retiring at his own request.

After retirement he made his home in San Francisco, California, where he enjoyed ten years of peace amidst his friends.

In 1924, his health failing, he went to Long Beach, California, where his family hoped the warmer climate would be of benefit. But it was not to be, and on March 1, 1925, surrounded by his family and fearless as ever, he went to his Great Commander.

Colonel Buttler was a member of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, the Order of the Carabao, the Army and Navy Club of Manila, the Pacific Union and Union League Clubs of San Francisco.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Marion Bradford Buttler, and one son, Major Bruce Bradford Buttler, U. S. A., retired, both of whom make their home in Long Beach, California.

No. 2382. Class of 1871.

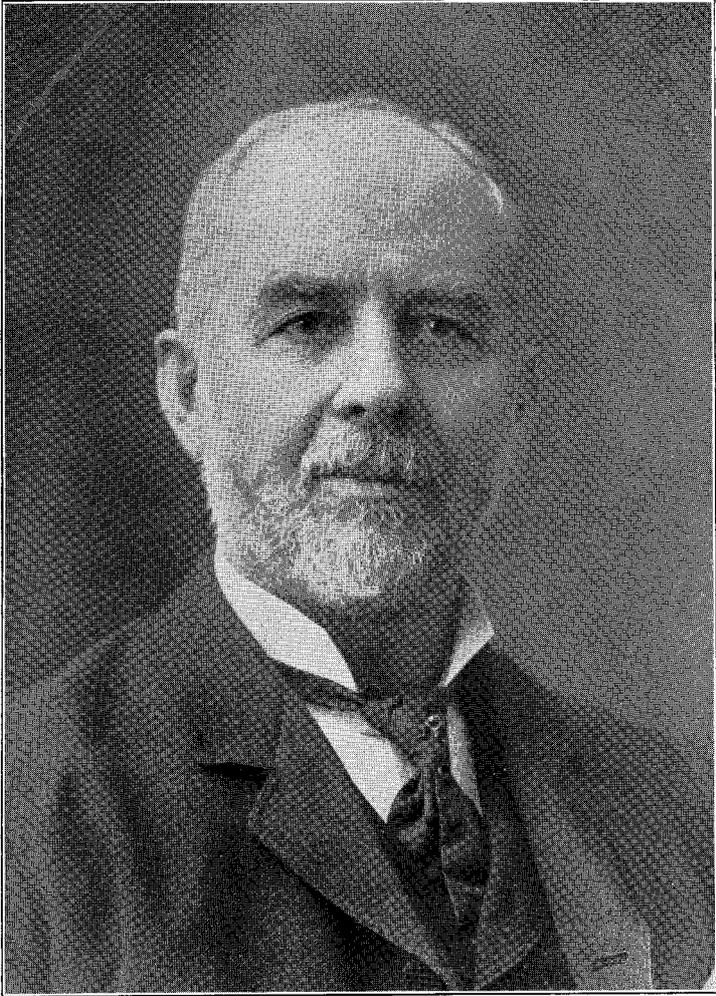

Died, March 29, 1925, at Brooklyn, New York, aged 78 years.

Wallace Mott was born April 4, 1847, at Westbury, Long Island, New York. He graduated from the Military Academy June 12, 1871, when he was promoted to Second Lieutenant, 8th Infantry. He served in garrison at David's Island, New York, September 30 to November 1, 1871, and at Chicago, Illinois, November 3, 1871, to May 3, 1872. He then spent a short period on frontier duty in Utah, Colorado, California and Nebraska, including escort duty with Wheeler's Exploring Expedition west of the 100th Meridian.

He served at the Military Academy as Assistant Professor of Mathematics from November, 1873, to August, 1878. After six years with his regiment in California, he returned to the Military Academy, where he served until 1890 as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy. On March 9, 1891, he was retired from active service with rank of Captain on account of disability contracted in line of duty.

After his retirement he resided in Brooklyn, New York, and for many years preceding his death was an invalid. That he retained his interest in West Point is evidenced by the fact that he left among his effects a photograph and brief statement of service with directions that they be sent to the Secretary of the Association of Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy.

COLONEL WILLIAM HENRY HEUER

WILLIAM HENRY HEUER

No. 2054. Class of 1865.

Died, April 28, 1925, at San Francisco, California, aged 82 years.

William Henry Heuer was born in St. Louis, Missouri, March 2, 1843, and attended public school and high school in that city. At the age of sixteen he worked as freight clerk on the Mississippi River for the Keokuk Packet Company.

In 1861 he received an appointment to West Point through Senator Frank P. Blair. Entering the Academy, September 1, 1861, he graduated number eight in his class, June 23, 1865, and was promoted at once to First Lieutenant, Corps of Engineers.

Assigned to duty in California, he served for five years as Assistant Engineer on Surveys in connection with River and Harbor Improvement in the western states. This work included surveys of the rapids of the Columbia River and for a Military Wagon Road from Fort Churchill, Nevada, to Boise City, Idaho, as also for the removal of Blossom Rock in San Francisco Bay.

He was promoted to Captain, Corps of Engineers, 1870, and spent a year with the Engineer Battalion at Willet's Point, New York. From 1872 to 1876 he was Assistant Engineer to General Newton on the most interesting operations for the removal of Hallet's Point, East River, New York City. This work involved the sinking of shafts and driving tunnels through rock and was for the purpose of improving the East River channel.

After a few months of survey work in connection with the Union and Central Pacific Railways in 1876, he was ordered to Key West, Florida, where he spent two years on work connected with the building of seacoast fortifications and erection of lighthouses. The latter work included the erection of Fowey Rock and American Shoal lighthouses on the Florida Reef.

From 1878 to 1884 he was on duty at New Orleans, Louisiana, in charge of River and Harbor Improvements and the construction and maintenance of lighthouses and seacoast fortifications on the Gulf of Mexico. During this period he was in charge of Channel Measurements at South Pass, Mississippi River. In 1885 and 1886 he was in charge of River and Harbor Improvements with station at Philadelphia, then returned to duty at New Orleans for two years.

Promoted to Major, Corps of Engineers, in 1884, he returned to San Francisco, California, in 1887 and served there in charge of River and Harbor Improvement and other engineering work in California and Oregon until 1896. During this period he was a member of the California Debris Commission and numerous other important Boards. From February, 1896, to October, 1897, he was at Cincinnati, Ohio, in charge of improvements on the Ohio River, after which duty he again returned to San Francisco.

Here he remained throughout the remaining period of his service on the active list of the army. During the Spanish-American War he was in charge of the submarine mine defense of San Francisco Harbor. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1900 and to Colonel in 1904, and, in addition to the usual duties of his office, was in active charge of many varied and important special engineering projects. As President of the Board he directed the making of plans and estimates for the defenses of Honolulu and Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. Among his specially important engineering works were the dredging of the channel over the bar at Pearl Harbor and the completion of the jetties at the entrance to Humboldt Bay, California.

On March 2, 1907, he was retired from active service by virtue of his having reached the statutory age limit. He continued to reside in San Francisco, where he engaged in active work as a consulting engineer. With the entrance of the United States in the World War he was recalled to active duty and placed in charge of the work of the Engineer Corps in California. This work he ably administered throughout the war.

After the war Colonel Heuer continued to reside in San Francisco at 1235 Fifth Avenue. Here he died, April 28, 1925, from an attack of bronchial pneumonia.

Colonel Heuer was never married and throughout his long and busy life his main interest was in his profession. While for so many years he was identified with the work of the Corps of Engineers on the Pacific Coast, he retained a keen interest in the problems connected with navigation on the Mississippi and its tributaries. He retained his vigor and energy to an unusual age and his record of achievement is a splendid one.

Colonel Heuer is survived by a sister, Miss Mary Heuer, 304 Skinker Road, St. Louis, Missouri; by a niece, Miss Elizabeth P. Heuer, who attended him during his last illness, and by three nephews, all of the latter residing in St. Louis, Missouri.

BRIGADIER GENERAL WILLIAM CHAMBERLAINE

WILLIAM CHAMBERLAINE

No. 3467. Class of 1892.

Died, June 8, 1925, at Paris, France, aged 54 years.

William Chamberlaine, son of William Wilson Chamberlaine and Matilda Dillaird Chamberlaine, of Norfolk, Virginia, was born March 1, 1871. In 1888, at the age of seventeen, he was appointed to the U. S. Military Academy. He graduated in 1892, eighteenth in class standing, and selected the Artillery Arm. After two years of garrison duty at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, and Fort Hamilton, New York, he married Margaret Smith, daughter of Brigadier General Frank Guest Smith, U. S. Army. In the fall of 1894 he was sent to the Artillery School and was an honor graduate of the Class of 1896. He remained on duty at Fort Monroe, Virginia, until the war with Spain, during which he commanded a battery at Fort Morgan in the defense of Mobile, Alabama.

He was promoted, March 2, 1899, and, as First Lieutenant, performed various duties, being in turn Acting Assistant Adjutant General, Department of Texas; Instructor of Chemistry, U. S. Military Academy, and Assistant to the Chief of Artillery, entering upon this last duty shortly before reaching the grade of Captain, July 1, 1901.

From this time his influence throughout the Artillery Corps was felt in every important development. He was active in the organization of the Artillery under the Act of 1901. In the fall of 1903 he was sent to Fort Monroe, Virginia, as a member of the Artillery Board and to command a company. The Artillery Board was an advisory body to the Chief of Artillery in technical matters, and this was a period of rapid advance in methods and material. Captain Chamberlaine's company soon became a standard for discipline and efficiency and was used in many tests of new devices and systems for the improvement of artillery fire.

With the organization of the General Staff in 1906, he was one of those selected. His first important assignment as a general staff officer was in Japan as attaché, where, with General Pershing and Colonel Irons, he attended the maneuvers of the Japanese armies in 1907. On concluding this duty he served as Assistant Chief of Staff, Pacific Division and Philippines Division, till the spring of 1909, being also Division Artillery Officer. He performed valuable services in the initiation of the plans for the defense of the Philippine Islands, making many personal reconnaissances. His foresight and his support of the various projects for the stronghold of the Philippines, Corregidor Island, was of great assistance to those charged with their execution. While in the Orient he traveled extensively, familiarizing himself with conditions in China and Japan. He returned to the United States via Europe, being halted en route by orders to act as one of the American observers at the French Annual Maneuver of 1909. The remainder of his detail on the General Staff was spent in Washington, D. C., as a member of the War College Division.

On termination of this detail, during which he had been promoted to the grade of Major, he was placed in command of Fort Warren, Massachusetts. In March, 1911, he took his battalion to the Mexican border, as part of the provisional regiment of Coast Artillery acting as Infantry. In the fall of the same year he was detailed as Director, Department of Artillery, Coast Artillery School, and served in that capacity till September, 1913, when he was again called to Washington as Assistant to the Chief of Coast Artillery. While at Fort Monroe, he conceived and put into operation the Coast Artillery War Game that has proved of such value in the instruction of Regular and National Guard troops in the principles and technique of harbor defense. He was made a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications and served on several other boards appointed to consider technical subjects, including the defense plans for the Panama Canal, for Guantanamo, and for the entrance to Chesapeake Bay.

From March, 1914, to February, 1917, he commanded Fort Andrews, Boston Harbor, and was identified with the revision of the defense plans both seaward and landward. He became one of General Wood's most trusted advisers in the work undertaken at that time. In February, 1917, he was brought to Fort Totten, New York, as a member of the staff of the Commanding General, North Atlantic Coast Artillery District, where the various defense plans for New England were being co-ordinated. He reached the grade of Lieutenant Colonel July 1, 1917.

During these later years the qualities evidenced earlier in his career became fixed. Utterly devoted to his profession, he was a soldier in every thought and instinct. Gifted with the faculty for clear thinking with sound judgment, he was also a deep student—to him the solution of artillery problems was a pleasure, and his interest in all that pertained to the military art was equally keen. He was uncompromising in his adherence to principle and fearless in his expression of opinion. Neither the hope of commendation nor the fear of disapproval could influence him to support a policy he felt was wrong or to yield a point he was convinced was for the good of the service. In every body of officers with whom he associated his influence was great, if not predominant. As a commander he was a strict disciplinarian, demanding compliance with orders and regulations and exacting a high standard of ethics in personal and social behavior. In these he controlled by example as well as by precept; he spared himself no more than he did his subordinates. Withal, he never failed of time to advise and assist a conscientious officer or soldier desiring to improve himself in his profession. Like all strong characters, he had devoted followers and equally earnest opponents; even from the latter he commanded respect and admiration.

He was selected to command one of the first provisional regiments of Coast Artillery for the World War, was promoted to the grade of Colonel, and organized his regiment at Fort Adams, Rhode Island. His command sailed in August, 1917, and was among the first 40,000 American troops sent to France.

Within two weeks of his arrival he was assigned as American liaison officer at the Headquarters French General Artillery Reserve. Here he established contacts that were of marked assistance to him in the great operations of the following fall, and formed friendships that were a lasting satisfaction to him. Retained correspondence with Generals Buat and Maurin show plainly how thoroughly he won the confidence of the foreign officers with whom associated. He was appointed Brigadier General, December 17, 1917. His first command as a general officer was the 57th Brigade, Field Artillery. On May 11th he was transferred to the 2d Artillery Brigade forming part of the famous 2d Division. Here his thorough preparation by years of devoted study stood him in good stead, for within one month he found himself charged with the artillery action of the command hastily thrown in to check the most threatening sector of the German drive on Paris. In the fierce fighting that turned back the tide of invasion the 2d Artillery Brigade, with attached French artillery, played an important part. In an article descriptive of the month's operations, the Division Commander stated: "The Artillery Brigade was doing heroic work" * * * "Thus the Artillery played a controlling part in the battle." In writing General Chamberlaine, General Harbord, who commanded the Marine Brigade at Belleau Wood, stated as follows:

"1. The undersigned learns with regret of your relief from the command of the 2nd Field Artillery Brigade, even though it gives you an opportunity with an independent artillery command.

"2. Advantage is taken of this occasion to testify to the efficient co-operation this Brigade has had from you and your command through the operations of the past twenty-five days. There has not been lacking at any moment a complete confidence in you and the artillery under your command, and the perfect understanding which has existed has enabled us to improve to the utmost the fine support we have had from you. The Marine Brigade has come to rely on its artillery support to an extent that no one not actually a participant in the rather stirring events since June 1st could understand.

"3. For the future artillery support of my Brigade, and for the liaison so necessary, I can ask nothing better than that under your successor your Brigade shall give us the same efficiency that it has shown under your command."

A letter in similar terms was written by the Division Commander and General Chamberlaine's headquarters was one of those visited by the French Premier, M. Clemenceau, for the purpose of expressing personally the gratitude of the French people.

The duty to which General Chamberlaine was next called was command of the railway artillery. This detail had been decided upon at a conference of the Chief of Staff and his artillery advisers some time before, but the action was suspended until after the crisis of the German drive. In his new command General Chamberlaine was charged, not only with plans for operations and supervision of their execution, but with conducting schools of instruction, with organization, with supply, and with administration. He was authorized to exercise the authority, powers and functions conferred upon division commanders. His units were widely scattered, some serving with French and some with American forces. There were a total of 66 heavy railway guns organized into two brigades each of three regiments; in addition there were five naval guns on railroad mounts. Those units assigned to support the American forces were under immediate direction of General Chamberlaine, who was assigned as Commander of Railway Artillery, 1st Army, for this purpose. Possessing full confidence of his immediate commander, he organized the Railway Artillery Service of the entire front and with tireless energy drove forward the training and equipment of his units until over ninety per cent of the railroad batteries were participating in combat.

In the St. Mihiel action over 2100 rounds were fired from the 64 guns in action. These guns varied from 7.6 inches to 16 inches in caliber; 41 locomotives, 113 ammunition cars, and 386 other cars were required for their service. In the Meuse-Argonne over 13,150 rounds were fired. The effectiveness of the fire was proved by inspection of the various objectives after the battles. This was commented upon in the final report of the Commander in Chief: "Our heavy artillery was skillfully brought into position to fire upon the Carignan-Sedan Railroad and the junctions at Longuyon and Conflans."

General Chamberlaine's services were recognized by the French government by the award of the Cross of the Legion d' Honneur and the Croix de Guerre with palm and by his own government by the Distinguished Service Medal. The citations were as follows:

France:

"A general officer of high professional worth and morale who, after having directed the instruction of the First American Coast Artillery Unit, disembarked in France, and co-operated in the organization of the American R. G. S., distinguished himself as commander of the Artillery of the Second Division, at the time of the operations of the Belleau Wood. He was then placed in command of the American A. L. V. F., which played an important role in the offensives of the allied armies from July, 1918."
