Report of Annual Meeting

Held at West Point, New York

June 11, 1926

1. The meeting was called to order at 2:00 P. M. by the President of the Association.
2. Prayer by Chaplin Wheat of the U. S. Military Academy.
3. By general consent the calling of the roll was dispensed with. The attendance was large, and, while a list of those present was not obtained, the list of visiting graduates as officially registered, June 1926, is printed in this report,
4. The President informed the meeting that the Class of 1926 had joined the Association to a man, thus adding 152 new members and establishing a record of 100% for class membership. He also stated that eleven members of former classes had joined since the last annual meeting.
5. The President then made some brief but appropriate remarks relative to the possibilities of the Association for fostering and encouraging the growth of those sound principles and good judgment that have guided the Military Academy through the past one hundred and twenty-four years. He asked for more active work in behalf of the Association and called for suggestions to be reported upon at the next annual meeting.
6. Hagood, 1896, then spoke on the subject of alumni societies in other colleges and educational institutions, stating that they seldom limit their membership to graduates, and pointing out that most of the graduates of the Military Academy are in the army where they are handicapped in expressing views or taking action that might not be in accord with the wishes of the War Department. He proposed that the name of the Association be changed to Alumni Association of the Military Academy and that membership be extended to include all men prominent in civil life who have worked faithfully for the Academy.
7. Andrews, 1886, rose to say that a special committee, called for by a resolution passed at the last annual meeting, had given careful consideration to the question of extending membership in the Association to non-graduates and had prepared an extended report which he expected to present to the meeting. He took the occasion to make some brief remarks about the West Point Society of New York City, outlining its organization and purpose, and stating that all former cadets with as much as six months service at the Academy were eligible for membership.

8. The President next called for the report of the Treasurer which was read and accepted by the meeting.
9. The report of the Executive Committee of the Association was then read to the meeting by the Chairman of the Committee, Dykman, 1875. It was as follows,—

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, ASSOCIATION OF GRADUATES, JUNE 11, 1926.

In accordance with the provisions of the constitution and notice duly sent out by the President, the Executive Committee of the Association met at West Point, N. Y., June 10, 1926 at 3:00 P. M.

The following members, constituting a quorum, were present,—

W. N. Dykman.....1875	C. L. Fenton.....1904
Elbert Wheeler.....1875	Earl McFarland.....1906
A. D. Andrews.....1886	W. E. Morrison.....1907
M. B. Stewart.....1896	R. L. Gray.....1911

The Secretary presented the plan of arrangements for the annual luncheon and the program for the annual meeting, both of which were approved by the Committee.

The accounts of the Treasurer, having been audited by a member of the Committee, were accepted and approved.

The Treasurer and the Secretary presented to the Committee facts showing that the customary revenues of the Association are no longer adequate to publish the annual report and to meet the other annual expenses of the Association. The Committee then voted to recommend the appointment by the President of a special committee to study the question of the finances of the Association and to make a special report on the subject at the next annual meeting.

The Committee then proceeded to consider the report of a special committee on changes in membership requirements, appointed earlier in the year by the Chairman of the Executive Committee in accordance with the resolution passed at the last annual meeting to the following effect,—

“That the Chairman of the Executive Committee should appoint a special committee to make a thorough study of the question of admitting non-graduates to membership or associate membership in the Association and that this special committee should submit a complete report with their recommendations at the next annual meeting of the Association”.

The senior member of the special committee present will shortly present the report to the meeting. The Executive Committee voted unanimously to approve the report and to recommend that it be adopted at this meeting.

In accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2, By-Laws of the Association, the Executive Committee presents to the annual meeting its nominations for President and Vice-President of the Association for the coming year,—

For President—Robert L. Bullard, 1885.

For Vice-President—William N. Dykman, 1875.

10. Upon the completion of the reading of the report of the Executive Committee, a motion was made, duly seconded and passed, adopting the report and the recommendations therein.

11. Andrews, 1886, senior member of the special committee present, then read the report of the special committee on membership, copy of which report is published elsewhere in this volume of the annual report. He then submitted to the meeting for adoption the two resolutions of the special committee, the first for an amendment of the constitution and the second for an amendment of the By-Laws.

12. At this point Hagood, 1896, spoke to the meeting, pointing out that the proposed amendments referred only to former cadets of the Academy and did not provide possible membership for officers of the army and civilians who had never served as cadets but who had rendered valuable services to the Academy. He read a proposed amendment embodying his views, but, after general discussion, withdrew it in order that a vote on the amendments proposed by the committee might be taken.

13. The President then read the proposed amendment to the Constitution which was as follows,—

“That the constitution be amended as follows: Insert after words “Article I” the words “Par. 1. Add to Article I a new paragraph as follows,—

Par. 2. Former cadets, who have served not less than one academic term at the United States Military Academy, and who were honorably discharged therefrom, may be admitted to the Association as associate members, in the method and subject to the conditions provided in the By-Laws of the Association, but they shall not be so admitted until after the graduation of their respective classes. Associate members shall pay the same dues and have all the rights, privileges and duties of members, excepting the right to vote and to hold any of the offices named in Article 3, Par. 1.”

14. The President then called for a rising vote and the amendment to the constitution was carried by the necessary three fourths majority of those present.

15. The President then read the proposed amendment to the By-Laws which was as follows,—

“That the By-Laws be amended by adding to Par. 1. at the end thereof, a subparagraph as follows,—

Former cadets, who are eligible under Article I, Par. 2, of the Constitution, and who have been nominated by two members, may be admitted as associate members by a majority vote of the Executive Committee at any of its meetings regularly called, and when so admitted shall qualify as provided for graduates in Article I, Par. 1, of the Constitution and in these By-Laws. They shall be subject to the same penalties as members on non-payment of dues and by a majority vote of the Executive Committee regularly called, may be dropped from the rolls of the Association for cause.”

16. The President called for a rising vote on the proposed amendment to the By-Laws and the amendment was carried by the necessary majority.

17. Hagood, 1896, then moved that his proposed amendment be referred to the Executive Committee for consideration and for such further modification as may be considered, to the constitution. The motion was seconded by Echols, 1891, and carried.

18. At the request of the President, Carter, 1899, then spoke to the meeting in behalf of the special Organ Committee appointed earlier in the year in accordance with a resolution passed at the last annual meeting. He stated that the committee composed of Johnson, 1879, Pierce, 1891, and Carter, 1899, had printed and mailed circulars to 800 graduates in civil life and to 4000 graduates on the active and retired lists of the army, that the first subscription had been received on May 23rd, that subscriptions to the amount of $4500.00 had been received and that the Committee was confident as to the final results of the campaign but would not be prepared to submit a final report for some time.

19. The President then referred to a suggestion made at the last annual meeting to the effect that the time had arrived for the erection of a notable memorial building. He spoke of the great significance of such a memorial and then called upon Morris Schaff, 1862, the author of the original suggestion, to make a few remarks.

20. In response Schaff, 1862, spoke as follows,—

“Moved by the same impulse that has moved us, the men who have graduated at the various colleges of our country are all going back to their colleges and Alma Mater this month of June. They are going back to feast their eyes on old scenes; to renew old acquaintances and take by the hand their old friends. Harvard, Yale and William and Mary are much older than West Point, and point with pride to the great services their graduates have rendered their country; but not one of them has just such a lineage or background as West Point. Not one of them has such traditions.

What is this background? There stands out in the past, a great devotion, a single high purpose that this institution shall teach the sons of our country devotion, valor and honor to their country. That is the background of West Point. West Point owes its existence to the idea of Washington, was brought into life by Washington, Hamilton, Knox and other great leaders in American history. Her first students laid the foundation at that early day, of good manners, good character. These are the contributions of the first students of West Point. What more did they do? They built here altars for the worship of honor and valor. The fires are still burning on these altars and are kept burning by the deeds of honorable and gallant men. The paths of glory lead to these altars. Let us die with our faces turned towards them.

The future memorial building should be not only for the great men who graduated, but for the cadets who enter the Academy and whose character will be built in this institution. The building must lead all our West Point buildings; you must have a building to commemorate the highest ideals of human nature. It should be worthy of its surroundings, worthy of the hills which surround it—as long as the fires are kept burning on the altar of honor and valor. So on you gentlemen, we impose one of the greatest tasks that has ever confronted West Point men. It is a great challenge to your appreciation of all fine things, an expression of your scholarship and understanding of the great realities of the nation that sends glory shining to its people. Let its interior be such that when Graduation Day comes the exercises can be held in it, its lofty, silent arches and appointments lifting all present to a high plane of pride in a renewed devotion to their country.

I do not expect to see this building, but my final prayer is that you who have charge of its structure, will be blessed;—that God will give you His great ideas. Nothing should be wanting. Let it cost a million, at least. What is a million, when we spend more than a million for a harbor in Boston, which has not enough water to allow ships in? Do not let any cheap things get into your mind. Let it gradually reach this high level. That is the kind of building that we want; one that stands for, and speaks in great, solemn tones for itself."

21. Hardin, 1874, spoke briefly about the way in which funds for Battle Monument were secured, how a comparatively small sum of money invested and reinvested became after twenty-five years a sum sufficient to build a monument worth while. He urged that a similar policy would be most appropriate for the new Memorial Hall.

22. Dykman, 1875, then moved that a committee be appointed for action on the matter of a report on Memorial Hall. The motion was seconded and carried without dissent.

23. The meeting next proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. The nominations of the Executive Committee were placed before the meeting and there were no additional nominations. The following were then elected,—

To be President—Robert L. Bullard, 1885.

To be Vice-President—William N. Dykman, 1875.

24. The retiring President, Pershing, 1886, made some brief but appropriate remarks and then turned over the chair to Dykman, 1875, Vice-President, in lieu of Bullard, 1885, the new president, who was not present at the meeting.

25. The new presiding officer spoke briefly in appreciation of the selection of Bullard for President, extended the thanks of the meeting to Jerome, 1870, for many good suggestions and active service, and then proposed that a message of thanks and appreciation be sent to Sladen, 1890, for the active support given the Association by the late Superintendent.

26. The proposal was made a motion by Pershing, 1886, seconded by Jerome, 1870, and the motion unanimously carried.

27. Echols, 1891, moved that a telegram of affectionate greetings be sent to Henry L. Abbott, Boston, Mass., our oldest living graduate. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

28. Burleson, 1906, moved that the 125th anniversary of the founding of the Academy be made the occasion of a special celebration and suggested that Marshall Foch be invited to be present. After some discussion in which it was brought out that Marshall Foch might be unable to attend, Pershing, 1886, moved that the matter be left to the Executive Committee to make all arrangements and to extend the invitation to some selected guest. The motion was seconded and carried.

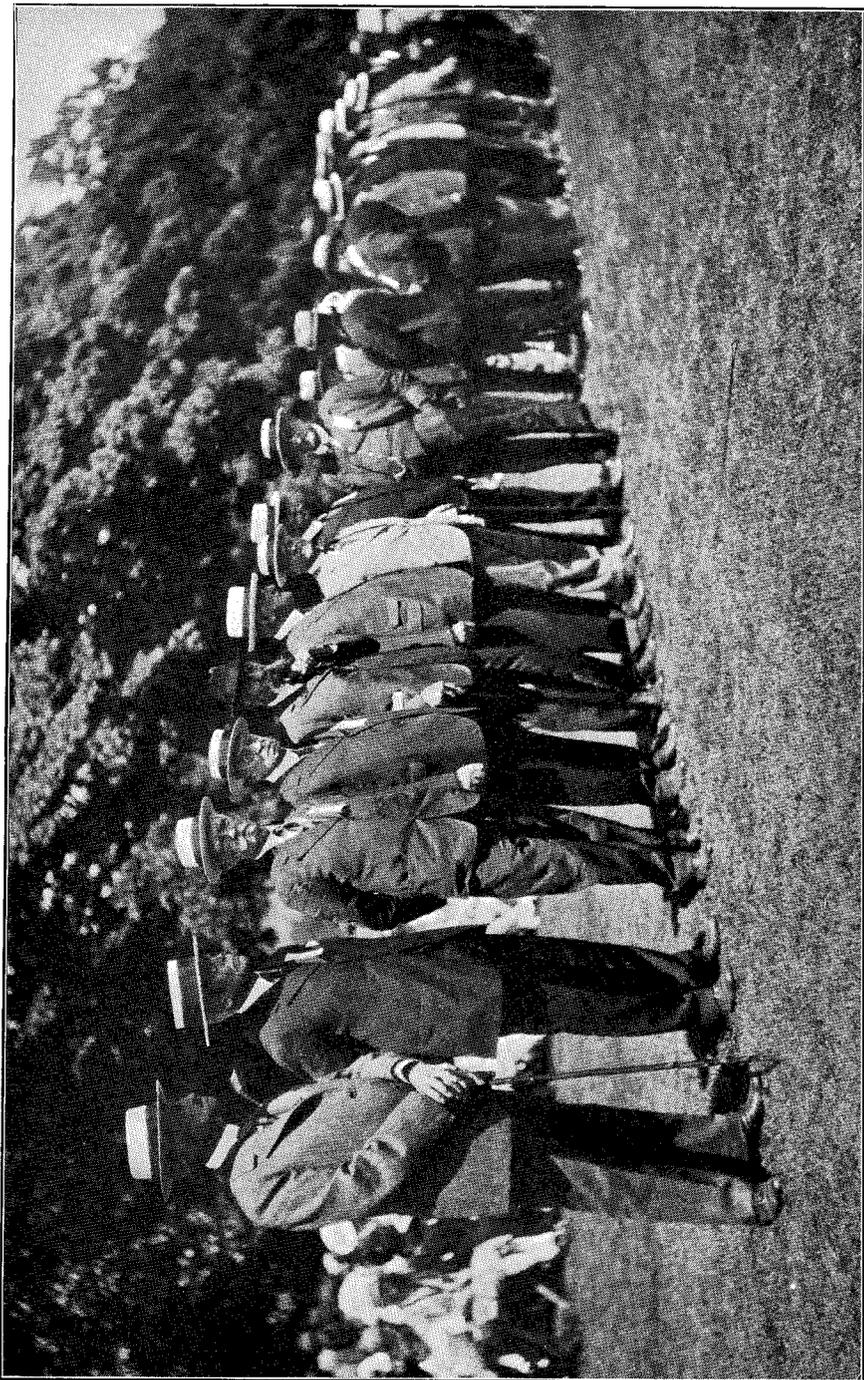

29. In response to request for information the Secretary spoke briefly about the lapel button authorized for use by members of the Association.

30. The Vice-President then presented the recommendation of the Executive Committee that the President be authorized to appoint a committee to study the question of the finances of the Association and to report at the next annual meeting. The recommendation was made as a motion from the floor, seconded and carried.

31. On account of other events scheduled for the day, the meeting adjourned at 4:15 P. M.

Report of Special Committee

on Changes in Membership Requirements

New York, N. Y.

May 26, 1926.

Colonel Wm. H. Dykman,
Chairman of the Executive Committee,
Association of Graduates,
United States Military Academy.

Dear Sir:—

At the annual meeting of the Association at West Point on June 11th, 1925, the following resolution was adopted:

“The Committee therefor voted that the Chairman of the Executive Committee appoint a special committee to make a thorough study of the question of admitting non-graduates to membership or associate membership in the Association and that this special committee should submit a complete report with recommendations at the next Annual Meeting of the Association”.

Under the authority of this resolution you appointed on April 1st, 1926, a special committee composed of:—

Colonel Edward Burr .....	1882
General Avery D. Andrews .....	1886
General William M. Cruikshank .....	1893
Colonel John R. Slattery .....	1900
Major Philip M. Mathews .....	1906
Major Robert L. Gray, .....	1911
Captain Ralph I. Sasse .....	1916

to perform the duties imposed by the resolution.

With limited time at its disposal, your special committee devoted efforts to the securing of information as to the views of graduates of the Military Academy upon the subject matter of the resolution, and as to the customs of the alumni bodies of colleges and universities in respect to the admission of non-graduates. A meeting of the committee was held on May 26, 1926, and with all members present, aided by the information at its disposal, proceeded with a full discussion of the subject before it, agreeing unanimously upon the conclusions and recommendations set down hereafter in this report.

Stating first its conclusions, your special committee reports that it is of the opinion that the objects of the Association set forth in Article II of the Constitution will be advanced by admitting to the Association as associate members, many of the former cadets of the Military Academy who did not graduate, and that it is of the further opinion that such admission may best be accomplished by suitable amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws, which at the same time will properly safeguard all interests of the Association and its members.

To put into effect its conclusions as stated, your special committee recommends;

(a) That the Constitution be amended as follows:

Insert after the words "Article I" the words "Par. 1". Add to Article I a new paragraph as follows:

"Par. 2. Former cadets, who served not less than one academic term at the United States Military Academy, and who were honorably discharged therefrom, may be admitted to the Association as associate members, in the method and subject to the conditions provided in the By-Laws of the Association, but they shall not be so admitted until after the graduation of their respective classes. Associate members shall pay the same dues and have all the rights, privileges and duties of members, excepting the right to vote and to hold any of the offices named in Article III, Par. 1."

(b) That the By-Laws be amended by adding to Par. 1, at the end thereof, a sub-paragraph as follows:

"Former cadets, who are eligible under Article I, Par. 2, of the Constitution, and who have been nominated by two members, may be admitted as associate members by a majority vote of the Executive Committee at any of its meetings regularly called, and when so admitted shall qualify as provided for graduates in Article I, Par. 1, of the Constitution and in these By-Laws. They shall be subject to the same penalties as members on non-payment of dues and by a majority vote of the Executive Committee regularly called, may be dropped from the rolls of the Association for cause."

In specifying the qualifications of any former cadet for eligibility for associate membership as proposed in the amendment to Article I of the Constitution, your special committee has set down its strong conviction that such eligibility must be based primarily upon (a) honorable discharge from the Academy and (b) cadet service of sufficient length to have inculcated the spirit and traditions of West Point.

Your special committee firmly believes that in this matter, length of service as a cadet is of prime importance and has given very careful consideration to specifying service limits that will meet the ends sought, and that will apply equitably under the varying academic conditions of the last half century, covering the service of former cadets still living. Practically all suggestions as to length of cadet service have named a time limit, usually of 6, 8, or 12 months, but a mere time limit results in many inequities consequent from the varying conditions such as the month of admission to the Academy. For example with a six months time limit, a June man who failed in January would be eligible, but a man who entered in September of the same class, who similarly failed, would not be eligible, though all personal qualifications of the two men were otherwise equal.

Your special committee does not believe that cadet service as long as eight months or one year is necessary as a qualification to associate membership, and that merely as a time limit, six months is sufficient, however, because of inequalities in its application for the reasons stated, we suggest the avoidance of a time limit of cadet service as a basis of eligibility. It is our well considered opinion that cadets who have withstood the training and trials imposed upon new cadets, and who have served one term or half yearly period of academic work will meet all reasonable requirements for associate membership, even though they may have succumbed at the first semi-annual examination, which at some periods in the history of the Academy, severely reduced the membership of many classes, because of lack of proficiency in a single item of academic work.

The status recommended for associate members is that which commonly is assigned to such members in associations of this character, in that it gives to them the rights, privileges and obligations of members, excepting the right to vote and to hold office.

The amendment recommended to be made in the By-Laws will place the admission and dropping of associate members under the control of the Executive Committee, following in this respect the custom developed by long experience in important social organizations, and the confidence that the Association places in its Executive Committee is well established.

Some objection has been made that admission to the Association by its name is limited to graduates of the Military Academy, and suggestion has been made that if former cadets are admitted to any form of membership, the name of the Association must or should be changed. Your special committee recognizes the force of these contentions, but at the same time it recognizes the difficulties because of sentimental and other grounds that will be encountered in any effort to change a name which stands for so much in the hearts and minds of West Point graduates.

Your special committee, however, holds that if the admission of former cadets to associate membership is for every other reason desirable and in the interest of the Association, such admission should not be barred because of the name of the Association. On the contrary, your special committee holds that former cadets may very properly be admitted to a limited membership in the Association of Graduates, without change in its name and without in any way detracting from the status, sentimental or material, of graduates who are members of the Association. It is of course desirable that the title of the Association should describe its membership but perfection in this respect is not always attainable. It should not stand in the way of ends that otherwise are desirable and frequently ignored in similar associations.

In arriving at its conclusions and recommendations, your special committee has not relied solely or to a preponderating extent upon the views of its members, in a matter of such importance to the Association, and to the many former cadets who acquired and still retain the spirit of West Point, and who continue to value highly the associations and fellowships formed during their period at West Point. Within the time available to us, we have sought the fullest possible information as to the opinions of graduates, and as to the customs of alumni bodies of other educational institutions.

The information before us will be found in an appendix to this report. For convenience, we briefly summarize it here.

In a vote upon this question by 55 officers at Fort Benning, Ga., 77% favored the admission of former cadets.

The Constitution of the Washington Section of the Association of Graduates, includes in that Section, ex-cadets who may be admitted to membership in the Association.

At the West Point dinner in Atlanta in 1925, it was unanimously voted that membership in the Association be extended to all who matriculated and entered upon the duties of a cadet, and whose service was honorable.

Twelve members of the class of 1903 stationed in Washington, favored associate membership for men in good standing with cadet service for at least one academic term.

The majority opinion among 25 officers stationed at West Point in 1926 favored the admission of non-graduates.

Of various individual opinions available, the majority favor the admission of former cadets.

We do not undertake to state here the arguments for and against the admission of former cadets to the Association, nor the qualifications variously proposed to govern their eligibility. This data will be found in the appendix to this report in sufficient detail to represent all sides of this question.

Your special committee sought for its guidance, information as to the customs of the alumni bodies of other educational institutions in respect to the admission of non-graduates, and inquiries were addressed to 45 colleges and universities including representative institutions of the East, South, Middle West and Pacific Coast. From the replies received from these institutions it appears that 28 admit any former student, 15 admit any former student who attended college for one year, and two admit graduates only. Also 28 provide the same form of membership for both graduates and non-graduates, 15 restrict non-graduate membership only in respect to voting and holding office, and 2 do not admit non-graduates.

The customs of other institutions can not necessarily be accepted as applying to the Military Academy, but the almost universal custom of admitting former, non-graduate students to some form of membership in alumni associations indicates most clearly the fellowship and esteem between classmates at all colleges, whether graduated or not, and we have every reason to believe that a no less strong fellowship pervades all members of West Point classes, whether graduate or non-graduate.

There has come before your special committee, suggestions respecting the admission to the Association of officers of the Army who are stationed at West Point, but who have had no service as a cadet at the Military Academy. This committee has construed the words "non-graduates" in the resolution of June 11, 1925, quoted above, as referring only to former cadets who did not graduate, and that is the meaning generally assigned to them in the discussions of this subject. We therefore, have assumed that our instructions include consideration only of membership for former cadets, and have made no recommendations respecting membership in the Association for persons who have had no cadet service.

The conclusions and recommendations in this report have the unanimous approval of your special committee which has authorized the indication of such approval, by the signatures of its chairman and secretary.

Article IV.—Political, or any other discussions foreign to the purposes of the Association, as set forth in this Constitution, or any proceedings of such a tendency, are declared inimical to the purposes of this organization and are prohibited.

Article V.—This Constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting of the Association, by a vote of three-fourths of the members present.

BY-LAWS

1. Every graduate in good standing may become a life member of the Association, without annual dues, by the payment of ten dollars at one time; or may become a member of the Association by paying an initiation fee of two dollars and annual dues thereafter of one dollar.

When a member paying annual dues shall, at any time, have paid into the Association twelve dollars in dues, including initiation fee, he shall become a life member.

When a member of the Association falls three years in arrears in the payment of his annual dues, he shall be notified by registered letter containing a copy of this by-law. If these dues are not paid within six months after receiving the notification, he shall be held to have resigned his membership in the Association.

The Secretary shall drop from the rolls of the Association any member who is dismissed from the service, resigns for the good of the service, or is dropped for absence without leave.

Former cadets, who are eligible under Article I, Par. 2, of the Constitution, and who have been nominated by two members, may be admitted as associate members by a majority vote of the Executive Committee at any of its meetings regularly called, and when so admitted shall qualify as provided for graduates in Article I, Par. 1, of the Constitution and in these By-Laws. They shall be subject to the same penalties as members on non-payment of dues and by a majority vote of the Executive Committee regularly called, may be dropped from the rolls of the Association for cause.

2. The President shall appoint thirty members who, together with the President, the Vice-President, and the Superintendent of the Academy, shall constitute the Executive Committee of the Association. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to make all needful preparations and arrangements for the ensuing meeting; to audit the accounts of the Treasurer; and to transact such other business as may devolve upon the officers of the Association. At each Annual Meeting of the Association, the Executive Committee shall nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the Association for the ensuing year.

3. The Treasurer shall disburse all moneys of the Association upon the order of the Executive Committee, attested by the signature of its chairman, and shall at each annual meeting make a full report of its receipts and disbursements.

4. The Secretary shall cause a book of records to be kept, exhibiting the address and occupation of every member of the Association.

5. The records of the Association shall be preserved at West Point, New York, and shall be open to the inspection of the members.

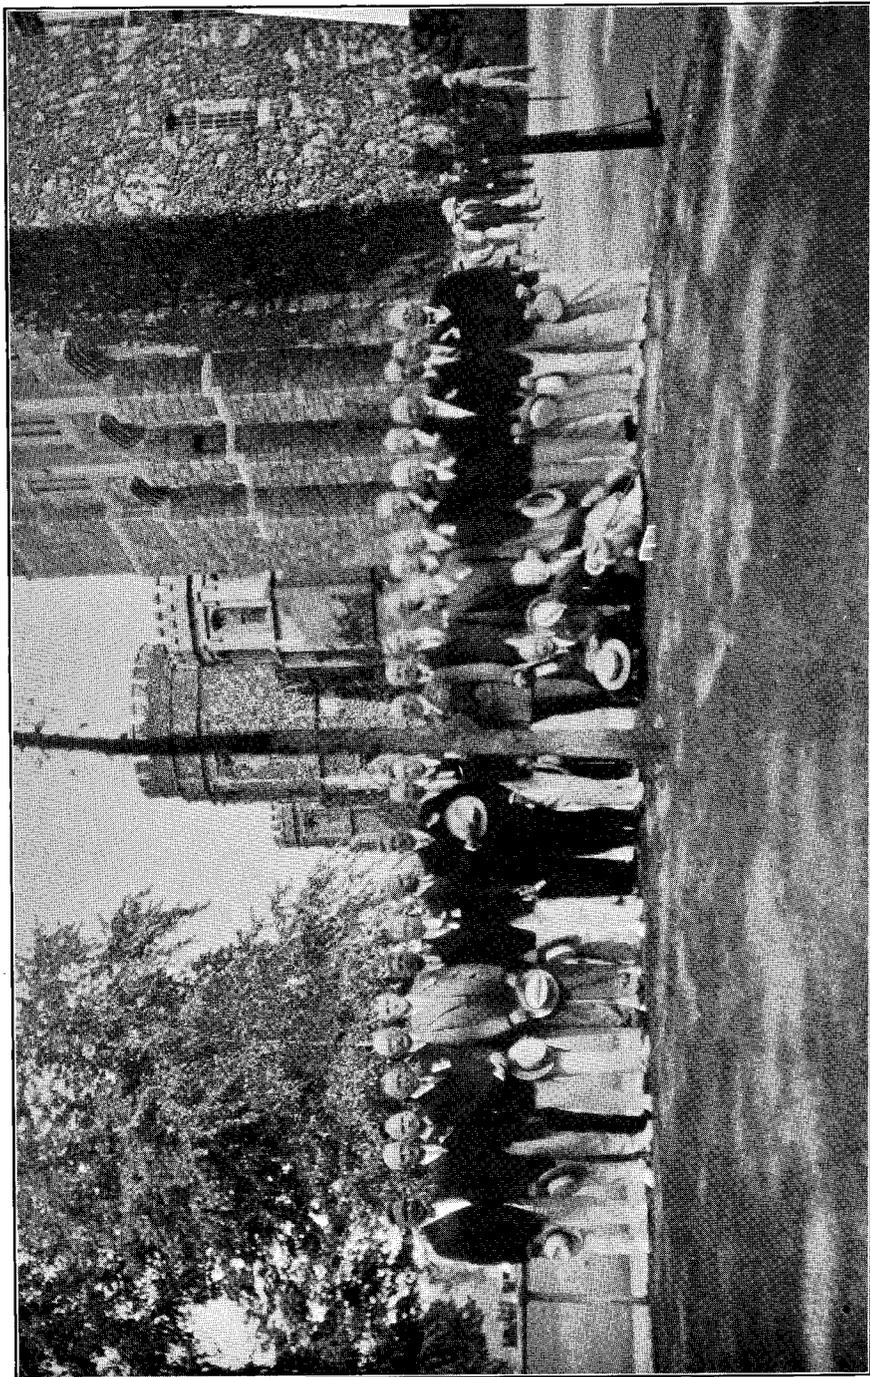

6. All members of the Association who may be prevented, by any cause, from personally attending the annual meeting are expected to notify the Secretary, and to impart such information in regard to themselves as they may think proper, and as may be of interest to their fellow members.

7. No member of the Association shall speak more than once on any subject or question of business, and no longer than five minutes, without the consent of the meeting being first obtained.

8. A two-thirds vote of all the members present at any regular meeting shall be required to alter or amend these By-laws.

BENJAMIN RANSOM McBRIDE

No. 6013. Class of June, 1918.

Died, Nov. 11, 1923, at Chicago, Illinois, aged 26 years.

"The passing of Lt. Benjamin Ransom McBride, Air Service, U. S. A., on November 11, 1923, at Ashburn Field, Chicago, Ill., has brought sadness to the host of friends throughout his wide acquaintance, both in the Army and out of it, and the Army has lost one of it's most promising young officers and one who was a general favorite wherever known because of his personal qualities", writes a friend and comrade.

Of most exemplary temperament and habits, he had the rare trait of being able to live above the realm of complaint, faultfinding and malice. Added to this was his abounding good humor and cheerful optimism on every occasion and under the most trying circumstances. It is worthy of mention that in addition to service as a flier he was a polo player of considerable promise and distinguished himself as a rifle shot while serving overseas.

Lt. McBride was born at Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 6, 1897, the third son of Col. R. B. McBride, U. S. A., and the grandson of the late Col. A. J. McBride of the Confederate Army. Brothers of Lt. McBride are Capt. Robert B. McBride, Jr., F. A.; Mr. A. J. McBride of Washington and Cadet Richard S. McBride of the U. S. M. A. His only sister is Miss Law McBride, now in Washington.

In addition to his father's family, Lt. McBride is survived by a wife, nee Miss Nanette Keefe of Dallas, Texas, to whom he was married at Mt. Clemens, Mich., in November, 1922, and a son, Benjamin Ransom, Jr., who was born Oct. 17, 1923. Lt. McBride entered the U. S. M. A. in 1915 and graduated in June, 1918. He was assigned to the Infantry, promoted to the grade of first lieutenant in October and sent to France. Here he served with the 38th Infantry at St. Nazaire and was later transferred to the 8th Infantry with station at Coblenz, Germany, where he remained until January, 1921, when he sailed for the United States. During his stay in Coblenz he was detailed in the Air Service and in 1922 was permanently transferred to this branch in which he served until his death.

At the time of his death he was commanding officer of the 95th Pursuit Squadron with station at Selfridge Field, Mich. His death was occasioned by an accident to his plane in the course of an exhibition flight for the benefit of the Army Relief Society. The funeral service was conducted on Nov. 16th in the Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church by Dr. Clovis Chappell, an old friend of the family. Interment was with full military honors and was made in Arlington National Cemetery, Chaplain William R. Scott officiating, and the band and military escort furnished by the 3d Cavalry, Ft. Myer.

MONTGOMERY MEIGS MACOMB

No. 2512. Class of 1874.

Died, January 19, 1924, at his home in Washington, D. C.

General Macomb was born October 12, 1852, in Detroit, Michigan. He was the son of Colonel John Navarre Macomb, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, and his wife, Anne Rodgers, daughter of Commodore John Rodgers, U. S. Navy. In 1908, General Macomb married Caroline Luce Walter, daughter of Admiral Stephen Blucker Luce, U. S. Navy.

After graduating from the Hughes High School in Cincinnati, in 1869, General Macomb entered Yale University. His intention then was to make the law his life work. But the next year, he secured an appointment to West Point, which he had long wanted, and so entered the Military Academy; he graduated therefrom four years later, Number Four in his class. He would have graduated even higher, but for his demerits. These latter were due to his keen sense of humor and desire for fun, which frequently ran counter to regulations. This sense of humor and fun remained with him during his entire life, and formed one of his many endearing qualities.

Upon graduation he selected the Artillery as his arm of the service, and he spent the rest of his life in that arm, until he became a General Officer. His first station was Fort Monroe, Virginia; next, in the capacity of aide to his uncle, General M. C. Meigs, he visited Europe in 1876. His next duty was with the U. S. Geographical Exploration West of the 100th Meridian (Wheeler Survey). This important work, carried on for seven years, formed the structure upon which our present day elaborate maps of the western part of this country are built. An echo of this survey is contained in a letter received only last year from an explorer in the Sierra Nevadas, saying "In the course of my investigations I have examined all the publications that I can find, referring to the Wheeler Survey, that you made in the Yosemite region. In the appendix to one of the Reports of the War Department,

BRIGADIER-GENERAL MONTGOMERY MEIGS MACOMB

I came across your account of your trip from Bridgeport across the divide into the headwaters of the Tuolomè River, including your ascents of Dunderbery, Conners, Lyell, Clark, and other peaks. I have been on several of these mountains myself and believe I recall seeing your signature on the top of Mt. Clark. I have also been on the ridge near Tilden Lake, known as Macomb Ridge, which I understand was named for you".

He was on duty at the Artillery School and with his regiment from 1884 to 1887. He then went to West Point and remained there until 1891, in the capacity of instructor in Mathematics and Assistant Professor in Drawing. The many reforms in the latter Department, during this time, were due in large part to him. He left West Point to go on Special duty with the Intercontinental Railway Commission in charge of Surveys and Explorations in Central America. With reference to this duty, he is said to have sent the shortest official telegram on record. Having received a telegram from the War Department, asking him whether he desired the detail, his telegraphic reply merely was "No" and was signed, Macomb, Lieutenant. However, this brief but clear telegram was ineffective, and he remained on this duty until 1896. In connection with this work an officer wrote "Concerning a period of about two years in the early '90's, I had a jungle acquaintance in Central America with 'Monte' Macomb, a fellowship born of professional duty in connection with a topographical survey of the West Coast of the Mexican Boundary to Panama. Macomb was in charge of field work of the "Army party" in that region. He, himself, assumed the duties of chief Astronomer while assigning to me the work of Assistant Astronomer and Chief Hypometric officer. In these two capacities, I was perhaps more closely associated with him than any other officer of the party, during this trying period. What a man he was! Indefatigable, tireless, relentless, jovial, winning, incomparable! He could get more work out of erring humanity than any other mortal. The foibles, follies, and petty jealousies of his subordinates, he smiled away with that knowing smile that seemed to say "were it not better not to be so wrought up"; more serious ill-temper would draw from him that penetrating look which meant "so far, but no further". His habitual manner was gentle and jovial. Thus the ship of survey was kept on an even keel, everyone doing the best that he could, cheerfully".

The importance of this work so impressed Macomb, that he triangulated his section and permanently marked it, in spite of directions to hasten the work. The result is that his part of the survey can ever readily be relocated. Another officer, in referring to this survey wrote General Macomb as follows: "My recent service has permitted me to at least come in contact with you personally on several occasions, and in the construction of our map of Central America, I have practically lived with the results of your Central American Work for the last eighteen months; the former has been a pleasure and the latter an inspiration. And, not only would I like to see you publicly recognized for your geographical labors, but I feel certain that you can, if you will, do a lot for the army in inspiring it and its personnel to a fuller and more comprehensive interest in the subject of Geography".

In this connection, it may be mentioned that General Macomb later became a member of the American Geographical Society.

From 1896 to 1898, Macomb was stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas, and here again we find him deep in surveying. This time it was the Fort Riley Reservation which he was surveying with his usual care and great accuracy. The outbreak of the Spanish-American war took him away before completion, and in command of Light Battery, 7th Field Artillery, he participated in the Porto Rican Campaign. Captain Macomb brought his battery from there to Washington Barracks where he was stationed when the Boxer Rebellion broke out in China in the summer of 1900. He immediately applied for and secured authority to take his battery to Peking, China. While at San Francisco, awaiting a transport, the Boxer Rebellion ended, so Macomb was sent to the Philippines. He remained here until 1902, in command of his battery and also as a member of several important boards, including one on the defense of the more notable harbors. Arriving back in the States in the latter year, Major Macomb became a member of various important boards until the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese War in 1904. He was then appointed American Observer with the Russian Armies, and was present in Manchuria at practically all of the principal battles of that war during 1904-5.

In 1906, he was back at Fort Riley, Kansas, in command of the Field Artillery. This was the largest permanent field artillery command in our service, and was the fountain head of knowledge for this arm at that time.

In 1907, having been promoted a Colonel, he organized the Sixth Field Artillery (Horse) at Fort Riley. This was the first Horse Artillery Regiment in our service since the Civil War, and the Colonel spared no pains to put in it the spirit, pride, and efficiency that it so ably displayed during the World War. He personally designed its beautiful coat-of-arms upon its organization, and then after the World War, he redesigned it so as to perpetuate its achievements during this struggle.

From Fort Riley, he went to Washington as a member of the General Staff Corps (during his life time he was three times a member of the War Department General Staff), leaving there in 1911, to organize and assume command of the Hawaiian Department, as a General Officer. Here, in addition to the military, he became much interested in civil affairs, particularly in Honolulu. Due to his usual warmheartedness, and delightful personality, he endeared himself to the people of that city—so much so that all classes united in doing him honor, respect and affection upon his departure in 1914.

General Macomb then came to Washington as President of the Army War College, where he remained until his retirement for age on October 12, 1916. During the World War, he was brought back on active duty, and for a time commanded at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, the great field artillery center during the war.

Only a few of the important boards of which he was a member during his life time have been referred to here. In addition, he was the first President of the Field Artillery Association.

He never lost track of his class-mates, either of Yale or West Point and delighted to attend their reunions.

His distinguishing characteristics were thoroughness and great fidelity to duty. And he combined to an unusual degree, ability, force, and knowledge with tact, personality and charm. Any officer who can leave behind him a reputation such as General Macomb's, may well feel that his life has been a success—and without qualification he may say "I have kept the faith".

He was always in the fore-front of progress. No man had less respect for the past than had he, if it interfered with development, progress and efficiency. At the same time, his unusually keen mind, his vast fund of military knowledge, and his wide experience prevented him from following false gods and heresies.

Taken all in all, I have never served under a finer man and a finer soldier—and, it was my privilege to serve under him quite intimately at various times, and in various capacities.

WM. J. SNOW,
Major-General, U. S. Army,
Chief of Field Artillery.

CLARENCE DEEMS

No. 2521. Class of 1874.

Died, May 29, 1924, at Baltimore, Md., aged 73 years.

Col. Clarence Deems, U. S. A., retired, a former well known officer of Artillery, died in Baltimore, Md., May 29, 1924. He was born in Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 10, 1850, and was graduated from the U. S. M. A., in the Class of 1874, when he was assigned to the 4th Artillery.

Col. Deems was retired from active service Dec. 4, 1911, upon his own application, after more than forty years' service. Among his various services he has been on duty at Alcatraz Island, Fort Monroe, Washington Arsenal, Fort Warren, Fort Adams, Fort McPherson, San Francisco Barracks, Fort Hancock, Fort Worden, Fort Howard, and Fort Mason, and during the war with Spain he was in command of Fort Caswell and Fort Macon, N. C.

He took part in suppressing railroad disturbances in Maryland and Pennsylvania in 1877, and was also on duty as Professor of Military Science at Maryland Agricultural College from July, 1878, to July 1, 1881. He was on duty in the Philippines, where he performed highly creditable service. On one occasion in Manila, Gen. Otis, having heard that a conspiracy was on foot among the natives, sent for Col. Deems, then a captain in the 6th Artillery, and ordered him to look into it. The captain took with him about a dozen men, who followed at intervals, each keeping his predecessor in sight. He sauntered down the main street, and just as he was passing a closed door a Filipino gave three knocks so methodically as to attract the captain's attention. The door was opened and Capt. Deems, without even drawing his revolver, at once leaped inside and knocked the man senseless. He then grabbed the astonished doorkeeper before he could give a warning.

His men followed and the little band succeeded in taking prisoners a company of twenty-nine who were upstairs and could not get away. They also captured $43,000 in gold, found under an altar in an adjoining room, which was intended for Aguinaldo.

The family of Col. Deems is one prominent in Maryland history, and its members have been Americans for 250 years. His great-great-grandfather took an interest in the turmoil and strife of Colonial days. His great-grandfather, Frederick Deems, was a private in the Revolutionary War, and enlisted "for the war". His grandfather, Capt. Jacob Deems, served in the 1812-1814 war with Great Britain at the battle of North Point. His father, Gen. James Monroe Deems, helped to organize and subsequently commanded the 1st Maryland Cavalry during the Civil War, and was brevetted brigadier general by Congress for bravery and gallantry on the field in a number of hotly contested battles.

His son, Lt. Col. Clarence Deems, Jr. Field Artillery, U. S. A., graduated from West Point in 1901, and is now at Fort Leavenworth.

COLONEL LEWIS M. KOEHLER

LEWIS M. KOEHLER

No. 3081. Class of 1885

Died, July 16, 1924, at Los Angeles, California, aged 61 years.

Lewis M. Koehler was born in Galena, Illinois, July 21, 1863, his parents being Margaret Gund and Christian Koehler, who later moved to Le Mars, Iowa, from which place their son was appointed to the Military Academy, July 1, 1881. Upon his graduation June 14, 1885, he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Sixth Cavalry, going directly to New Mexico and into the field with Indian Scouts in the Geronimo Campaign for a year. He was graduated from the Infantry and Cavalry School, Fort Leavenworth, in 1889; and was in the Sioux Campaign from December, 1889, to March, 1890, under the Command of General Eugene Carr. He became a first lieutenant in 1892. In 1896 he was married to Maude, daughter of Anna Osborne and Daniel Read Anthony of Leavenworth, Kansas. A friend wrote—

"It is something to mourn for a dear husband, many can't. We all think of Lewis with tender love—he was a dear husband."

He was made a captain Nov. 7th, 1899, and went to the Philippines to join the command of General Funston who wrote—

"Koehler with his troop has been with me for some months. We have scouted over this province (around San Isidro) together for weeks and have had several fights with insurgent bands. I have recommended him for brevet for gallantry in a fight at Papaya on June 14. Koehler is a fine officer and likes to work."

TO BE MAJOR,—BY BREVET

* * * * *

"Captain Lewis M. Koehler, Fourth Cavalry, for distinguished gallantry in action near Papaya, Luzon, Philippine Islands, June 14, 1900, to rank from that date."

The silver citation star for this action was received in course of time. He was in station at Fort Leavenworth with the 4th Cavalry from 1901 to 1904; then at the Presido of San Francisco and again in the Philippines with station at Jolo and Mindanao, being in command of the West column in the attack upon Bud Dajo, in 1906, and commended in orders for conduct during this engagement.

Returning to the States he saw service on the Mexican border. He was made Major in 1911 and went from Fort Snelling to the Army War College, Washington, from August, 1911, to July 1, 1912; after which time he was in Porto Rico commanding the Porto Rican Regiment of Infantry until January, 1914, when he was ordered to Fort Bliss, Texas, with the 15th Cavalry.

In December, 1914, he became a Lieutenant Colonel and in April, 1916, went for a third time to the Philippines with the 9th Cavalry for only a few months. He was promoted to a Colonelcy July 1, 1916. Again back in the States he was on duty along the Rio Grande and finally at Fort Oglethorpe with his regiment waiting orders for France, when to his dismay, he was found incapacitated for active service and was retired for physical disability in line of duty in January, 1918. From February, 1918, to July 1, 1920, he served as Professor of Military Science and Tactics and as Commanding Officer of the S. A. T. C., University of Southern California; and was on General Recruiting Service in Los Angeles from July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1921.

After months of patient invalidism he passed away July 16, 1924, in Los Angeles, California, and was buried in Arlington with military honors and with old friends gathered there to pay him last homage. His active service began when the country was subject to Indian uprisings, continued through the Spanish war and Philippine Insurrection and he had the eager hope to go on with his work in France. He was quick to decide upon the solution of a situation and acted as promptly. No one needed to question where he stood as he always had the courage of his convictions; and officers and men could rely upon his sympathetic and warm hearted disposition for support if their cases merited such. To the undesirable class his discipline was too strict. Nothing was ever too much effort to aid a friend and there was no obstacle in the performance of duty but it seemed possible to surmount.

To quote from a few of the older and younger comrades:

"His loss comes as an especial blow to me, inasmuch as we were second lieutenants together in the old Sixth Cavalry and there formed a friendship that has always remained very dear to me, as I believe it was to him. To those who were associated with him in the military service, his character as a man and his fine soldierly qualities held the greatest appeal."

"I wish to express to you for the officers of the War Department and myself personally, our deep sympathy in the death of Colonel Koehler". His "service was long, efficient and honorable and his death will be deplored by all who served with him or knew him."

"From the first Colonel Koehler was so kindly and helpful to me that I soon learned to know and love him, and I felt sure of his friendly interest, and when in need of advice felt that I could depend upon his excellent judgment."

The youngsters always wanted to be in his troop or go with him on the marches for they knew that, though duties would be performed up to the handle, there would be a pleasure in the official and personal relations not often found."

"There have been many expressions of sorrow reach me from Colonel Koehler's old friends. I doubt sincerely if the passing of any other man in the military establishment could or would cause such general and profound regret.*****He was a loyal friend and guide to me, an inspiration—*****"

"We held a warm affection for each other through all the years from our cadet days and later service together as Lieutenants in the field and on staff duty. I look back upon those early days of our lives when we rejoiced in youth and health, full of enthusiasm for the Army and with a fierce desire, above all other interests and diversions, to make good in the service."

"I can think of him only with his buoyant spirit and vibrant personality."

HIS BEST FRIEND.

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM GEORGE HAAN

WILLIAM GEORGE HAAN

No. 3293. Class of 1889.

Died, October 26, 1924, at Washington, D. C., aged 61 years.

Army annals call for his full name and rank—Major General William George Haan. I stand upon my rights as a classmate and shall call him "Bunker".

Alumni custom calls for a memoir. Again I shall be subordinate and make this tribute a memory.

Be it known it was "Bunker" from the beginning. He brought the sobriquet to the Academy in 1885—the homely nickname linked with the sword in story and song. Boyhood chums must have christened him so on the sand-dunes of his native Northern Indiana, where he first met his happy parents October 4, 1863.

Shoulders fashioned for burdens; a bosom built for buffetings—girth never challenged chest in that sturdy structure; a jaw shaped for decisions, "Bunker" befitted that huge physique at West Point.

"Bunker" has always been better, just as "Old Hickory" and "Little Phil" and "Black Jack" were better, because it bespoke endearment.

There is a story (a legend, most likely) of two monarchs in kingly converse at eventide. "I possess that absolute sway over my subjects", boasted one, "that I could command anyone of them to hurl himself from the dizzy height of yon tower with full assurance that he would do so unhesitatingly."

"I am that close to the last of my people," said the second ruler, "that I can foregather with the least of them and their loved ones about the doorways of their humble homes in the hush of the fading day."

"Bunker" belonged to the last picture of supreme command. He ruled by love. He commanded confidence. Someone rode up from headquarters after the first gallant dash at the enemy on the Ourcq and said: "General, you have a great many unburied dead on the field."

"Bunker" told him there was more urgent business in hand for the resistless Red Arrows right then than burying the dead heroes. They were secure in their patriot immortality.

"Bunker" never shared the sentiment of the stay-at-homes that hostilities stopped too soon.

"Those who fell were to be envied their sacrificial glory," he said to me upon the morning of Detroit's memorable tribute to him and his command, just back from the Rhineland. "But I did not want to see another of those wonderful lads jeopardized needlessly."

It was thrilling to hear him recount with kindling eye and prideful accents how faultlessly his boys fulfilled their long training in the test of their first zero hour. "It seemed from where I watched their advance that they were calmly at drill!" said their commander.

Affectionate welcomings and repeated acclamations by Michigan and Wisconsin, whose sons he thoroughly trained and tenderly fath-ered, limned "Bunker" Haan the happy warrior, returning to the home-land that delighted to do him honor as a Major General.

But Memory, as this classmate's offering must transmit it, pre-fers to perpetuate his record as that of a Major Leaguer. It seems to suit better the homespun simplicity, the fine sportsmanship of the man.

May this memory record his romantic record—another epic of democracy—as a matter of innings. Fame was not gained by brave "Bunker" at a single bound, but by making the bases.

"Bunker at the bat" comes out of the nation's greatest game, American equivalent to that English sport which on the fields of Eton foreshadowed Wellington's victory at Waterloo.

"Bunker at the bat" means that all you had to do was to give him a fair chance and straightway prepare a rough draft of the good report that was bound to follow when the game was over.

He was a safe hitter. His fine mentality was ripened by study and reflection. His native good sense was seasoned by ample experi-ence. He had perception. He had patience. He had sound judg-ment. He could think things through. He could see things whole. He submerged self to the business in hand and put every ounce of power he possessed into it.

Every time "Bunker" was at bat—whether facing an infinitude of prosaic details of departmental organization, earthquake relief, gun-nerly instruction, coast defenses and national preparedness or the searching and dramatic tests of actual warfare—there followed the flat-tering fruition of his initiatives and unstinted praise from his superior officers.

Through the printed pages of his record there passes a pageant of plaudits, a procession of implied prophecies of still greater per-formances to come.

These range from the expressions of commanders of departments, chiefs of staff and inspectors in the periods of his service in the United States, Cuba and the Philippines, to commanders-in-chief of armies, American and French, the Congress of the United States and the Premier of France while he was warring against autocracy overseas.

Let us look upon the three alumni reunions as the three bases, and see how "Bunker" ran them.

Twenty-five years intervened between graduation and the first coming together of the Class of '89 in June, 1914. He had risen to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He had served two tours on the General Staff and was President of the National Land Defense Board and Member of the Panama Fortification Board. He had brought order out of chaos in the seismic catastrophe at San Francisco. He went to Panama as confidential representative of the President to report upon conditions there following the secession.

"Bunker" had arrived at first base.

But any hint as to what the interval had done to his insignia was lost in the light-hearted banter "Bunker" brought to that silver anniversary feast. Not years, nor mounting rank, nor weighty commissions could dwarf the mocking boy-spirit of "Bunker".

But he put aside his raillery for a moment, likewise the caricatures of his classmates he was making on the menu, and his face grew grave as he flayed a West Pointer who had been inspiring flings at the Academy curriculum and traditions. Loyalty was a deep-rooted passion with "Bunker".

In June, 1919, the Class of '89 foregathered again. An epochal five years for the United States and "Bunker". The sixth to go overseas, his division took a prominent part in the operations flanking the German position on the Vesle, and captured the key of this flank position, consisting of the Village of Juvigny and its surrounding points.

This interval saw "Bunker" raised to the rank of Major General as he was leading the 7th Corps of the Army of Occupation into the Rhineland.

"Bunker" was safe on second.

Yet when he was brought to his feet at the festal hour to greet his classmates—comrades to whose colors he had brought fadeless lustre—the thing that was on "Bunker's" mind was the diffuseness and futility of the alumni after-dinner oratory. He adjured all present and offending, to come to the point quickly or forever afterwards hold their peace.

As brave at the reunion feast of his fellows as at the Cote Dame Marie in the Argonne-Meuse offensive, was "Bunker"!

When the class sat down at the thirty-fifth anniversary dinner on June 10th, 1924, "Bunker" had directed the task of reorganizing the army on the principle that the War Department is the general overhead for all the components, including the National Guard and Reserves. He had been honored with the highest rank an officer can reach in the regular army, short of General of all the forces. He was a Major General.

"Bunker" stood at third base, with blushing honors full upon him.

Retirement had come; and an undertaking in the industrial world. Eager at 60, you see, to fight on in a field that taxes the cleverest business strategists. He had moved to Milwaukee. There in an atmosphere more than cordial to a well-beloved veteran and close to the scenes of the Red Arrow reunions, he wrote for the press out of the activities and fidelities of a full life.

"Bunker" was too ill to come to the reunion, but not too ill to return the historian's questionnaire, evasively and quizzically filled out. It was plain that neither age nor ailment could keep the playful leader from treating the blank form as an enemy, undeserving of aid, comfort or information.

From Washington, on Sunday, October 26th, 1924, came the tidings of which the indisposition of midsummer was a portent.

"Bunker" had reached "home".

"For when the One Great Scorer comes to write against your name, He writes—not that you won or lost—but how you played the game."

"Bunker" won. Wherefore he sleeps in the consecrated soil of Arlington, where so many of the nation's victors are sepulchered. His resting place will be marked by the two states whose citizen soldiery he led.

But "Bunker" won in a way that would have enabled him to reply with Thoreau, when asked if he had made his peace at the last with his Maker: "I have never quarreled with Him." He was that square with all.

Wherefore in loyal hearts he left behind—grateful countrymen, fellow officers, classmates, straight-shooting Red Arrows shining with fame, and that faithful fellow-farer through life, closer and dearer than all others—"Bunker" abides alway.

JAMES SCHERMERHORN, '89.

MILITARY SERVICE OF WILLIAM GEORGE HAAN

The military career of the late Major General William G. Haan was characterized by American democratic traditions. America offers opportunity for advancement to those who desire it. General Haan gained distinction through sterling qualities and a brilliant mind.

Born at Crown Point, Indiana, October 4, 1863, he started his career from that state by entering the United States Military Academy

June 14, 1885, and upon graduation accepted the appointment of Second Lieutenant, 1st Artillery, June 12, 1889.

As First Lieutenant, 3d Artillery, General Haan went to the Philippines with his battery and took part in the defense of Manila. He was cited for gallantry in action and distinguished conduct in action, entitling him to Silver Star Citations. After the battle of Manila, General Haan remained in the Philippines and became Assistant Secretary to the Military Governor, Philippine Islands, from August, 1900, to July 4, 1901, when he returned to the United States.

General Haan was given varied duties in his early career which, in the army, is indicative of ability. During his career as a Lieutenant and Captain he served in the Artillery Corps in garrison at the Presidio of San Francisco; Fort Columbus, New York; Fort Mason, California, and Fort Baker, California. He came in contact with the citizen element of the military life through a tour of duty as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the Northern Illinois Normal School, Dixon, Illinois.

Early in his career his ambition led him to seek assignment in the General Staff. To be selected and fitted for this assignment, an officer must possess a broad knowledge of the military establishment. This fact led him to serve incidentally in command of Company A Engineer Battalion in the Philippines, as Brigade and District Quartermaster in the Philippines and later as Captain of Coast Artillery at Presidio of San Francisco.

General Haan realized his ambition early and was assigned to the General Staff Corps, August 13, 1903. His service on the General Staff was distinguished and brought upon him most important duties. From November 1, 1903, to April 1, 1904, he was on confidential duty in Panama; from May 1, 1904, to August 1, 1905, he attended the Army War College and graduated with distinction. His remarkable ability made him Acting Chief of Staff, Pacific Division, April 18, 1906, to July 15, 1906, while the army was employed in relief work following the great earthquake and fire at San Francisco, California. With General Funston, General Haan secured the unstinted praise and gratitude of the nation. Following this duty he became Chief of Staff of the Maneuver Camp at American Lake, Washington, from July 15 to September 30, 1906, and there demonstrated his inherent ability to control large bodies of troops in training and maneuver. His executive ability placed upon his shoulders the duties of Military Secretary, Army of Cuban Pacification, Havana, Cuba, October 1, 1906, to March 1, 1907.

The logic of General Haan's thought and his capacity as a student, together with his practical common sense, brought to him the most difficult tasks of formulating plans for the Land Defense of the Nation. As an officer on duty in the office of the Chief of Artillery, he became a member of the Land Defense Board, March 18 to April, 1908. He served again in the same board from January 28 to February 16, 1911. His individual work on this board was very noteworthy and of especial benefit to the nation.

General Haan's career from a military point of view was made. It only remained for the proper occasion of national stress to become a fact, in order that his ability might be of lasting benefit to the country.

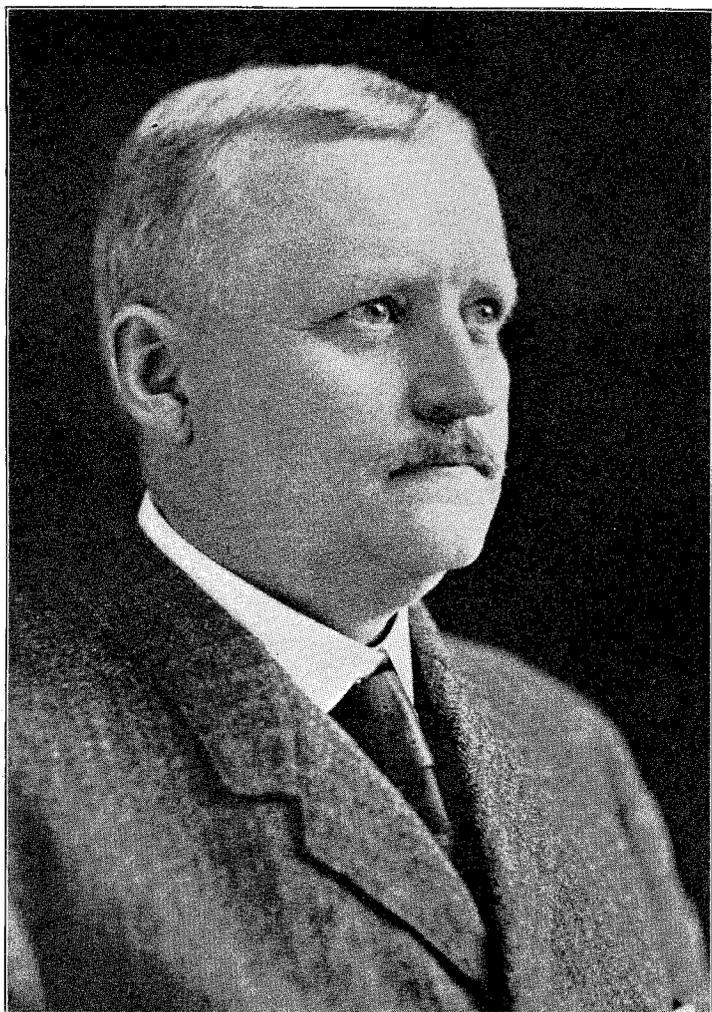

Previous to the World War, General Haan commanded the 2nd Battalion, 3rd Provisional Regiment, Coast Artillery, February 23 to June 15, 1911, and after serving as Commanding Officer of Fort Wadsworth, New York, from June 23, 1911, to May 8, 1912, he was again detailed on the General Staff, May 1, 1912. As a member of the General Staff he served at Governor's Island, New York, as Assistant Chief of Staff of the Eastern Division, and later, Chief of Staff of the Eastern Department, the most important staff position in the army at that time. Upon being relieved from the General Staff, September 15, 1914, he commanded the Coast Defense of Boston and the Coast Defenses of Eastern New York up to August 3, 1917.

When our country entered the World War the ability of General Haan was immediately recognized and he was appointed a Brigadier General, National Army, and placed in command of the 57th Field Artillery Brigade at Camp MacArthur, Texas. Undoubtedly the War Department with confidence placed him in temporary command of the 32d Division soon after his arrival at Camp MacArthur. Here especially the sterling qualities and brilliant mind of General Haan became apparent. The work he accomplished in a few months made the War Department recognize him. His temporary command of the 32d Division was made permanent and he was appointed a Major General, National Army.

As a Division Commander, none excelled or equalled him from the point of view of those who served under him. This view is the most important one. He proved himself to be a great general, a great leader. The French with whom he served recognized him as such. General Haan was the first American General to command French troops; he did so in Alsace. He again did so in the 10th French Army in the battle of Juvigny. These French troops fought with the 32d Division.

General Haan commanded the 32d Division during its training period and in all its operations in France. The defensive sector of Alsace in May, June and early July of 1918. In army reserve, north of Paris in July, 1918. The Second Battle of the Marne (the Aisne-Marne offensive) when the division captured Fismes. The battle of

LIEUTENANT DEXTER WRIGHT PARKER

Juigny (the Oise-Aisne offensive), when the division captured Juigny and so gloriously upheld American traditions and gave encouragement to our French allies. The battle of Romagne and Cote Dame Marie (the Meuse-Argonne offensive), when the division penetrated the famous German stronghold, The Kriemhilde Stellung. The drive on Longwy, the last battle of the war, and the division ceased firing at 11:00 a. m., November 11th, 1918. The march to the Rhine as a first line division, an honor well earned. When the 32d Division reached Longwy, General Haan relinquished command of the division and became commanding general of the 7th Corps, a promotion he had well earned. In addition to this honor, he was appointed a Brigadier General in the Regular Army.

General Haan returned to the United States in command of the 32d Division. Commanded Camp Custer, Michigan, until he was made Director of the War Plans Division, the most important General Staff position other than Chief of Staff that the army could offer. He was appointed Major General, Regular Army, July 3, 1920. When he retired March 31, 1922, the Regular Army lost one of its ablest officers; none surpassed him in depth of vision, direct thinking and military qualities. He died October 26, 1924, at Washington, D. C., one of America's great men.

DEXTER WRIGHT PARKER

No. 2350. Class of 1870.

Died, Feb. 8, 1925, at Meriden, Conn., aged 75 years.

Dexter W. Parker, aged 75 years and president of the Charles Parker Company, died at his home, 816 Broad St., at 11:00 o'clock last night after a long period of failing health.

Ill health compelled Mr. Parker several years ago to relinquish active management of the company founded in the city's early days by his father. He remained, however, as president of the company. He leaves two nephews, Wilbur F. Parker and L. C. Parker and a niece, Miss Elsie Parker Lyon.

Dexter Parker was the last living son of the late Charles and Abie Lewis Parker. He was born November 23, 1849, in the house at the corner of East Main and High Streets and received his early education at Russell's Collegiate and Commercial School. This was supplemented by attendance at the United States Military Academy at West Point, his appointment as a cadet coming through the late Congressman Warner of Middletown.

Mr. Parker was graduated from West Point in 1870 with the commissioned rank of second lieutenant and saw active service with the Sixth United States Cavalry on the frontier of Texas, Indian Territory and Kansas.

After a creditable service in the regular army he returned to Meriden and began his extended business career as his father's partner. In 1878, when the firm was merged into a corporation, he became one of the officers and gradually his father came to rely more and more upon him, until, in his old age, the entire management of the large business finally devolved upon him and his brother, Charles E. Parker.

Ill health finally compelled him to take an extended rest, which was continued until after his brother's death, when William H. Lyon, his brother-in-law, assumed the management of the business, and Mr. Parker became treasurer of the company. He held that office until the death of his father in 1902, when he naturally succeeded as president of the company.

Mr. Parker resided in the imposing Parker homestead on Broad Street, and was held in high regard in the community. His prominence in the manufacturing world made him one of the prime factors of the welfare of Meriden and his concern in the progress of his native town was always conclusively shown.

In addition to filling the important office of president of the Charles Parker Company, he was for many years a director of the City Savings Bank and of the First National Bank. He was also a member of the Home Club.

FRANCIS LOWELL HILLS

No. 2143. Class of 1866.

Died, Feb. 27, 1925, at Marblehead, Mass., aged 80 years.

Just when and where the competitive examination was originated for cadetships at West Point was not known to the authorities of the Academy in 1862. It was understood among undergraduates that the brilliant head of the Class of 1864 had won his way as being the prize scholar of the old New York Free Academy. It was so reported in the fall of 1863, when, even by inviting corps and division commanders to submit the names of the most promising young men from the volunteers, it had been found impossible to fill, as authorized by Congress, all the Southern vacancies. The Free Academy and one or two other great public schools had again been called upon, and "the gentleman from Texas", who, on reporting at the adjutant's office and being interrogated, replied with uncomplimentary emphasis, that he not only never had seen Texas, but hoped to heaven he might never have to. This candidate, at least, had taken no part with some of his future classmates in the desperate grapple at Little Round Top, where the head and first captain of the May class of '61 had fallen, with Vincent and Hazlitt, repelling the fierce charge of Hood's Division, and the battle flags of the Lone Star State, as poetically claimed by eulogists, were drenched in the life blood of some of the greatest soldiers of that deadly war. How the West Pointers died on that field! Reynolds, Garnett, Vincent and Hazlitt, O'Rourke, Cushing, Armistead, Woodruff, Barksdale—

MAJOR FRANCIS LOWELL HILLS

Was it because of this, I sometimes wonder—the constant sight of the half-masted flag—the ever recurrent wail of the Dead March—the brooding rumble of the muffled drums,—the perpetual coming and going of men whose sole response to our salute, all the more reverent because of the empty sleeve, or thudding crutch, could only be with bowed head, or half apologetic, grateful, yet rueful smile,—that even our forced gaities seemed to have a mournful strain, that the hop room floor was so scantily occupied, that the standard of scholarship seemed, for the time, at least, to lower? Study was all too hard in the lonely evening hours, with thought of what must be going on less than a day's journey to the southward. In all the years I knew it, life was never so lifeless at the Academy as in those solemn days of that fratricidal, yet inevitable, conflict, the black band on the left arm never so numerous along the thin gray line. In all the annals of the Academy never had its young and buoyant hearts so constantly before them the lesson, "In the midst of life we are in death",—the lesson that, in return for the Nation's fostering care, it looked to these chosen few, the graduates of its great war school, to stand ever ready to face in its service, "the last full measure of devotion". The saddest days our Alma Mater ever knew were those of the Civil War.

Yet it was with the Class of '66 that there came to the Academy two—perhaps three—lads who had won that prize through the medium of the competitive examination and the fact that older brothers were at the far front, battling for the honor of the old Flag and the very life of the Union. Among these was Francis Lowell Hills, of Massachusetts.

One hundred and eight names, so we were told, had appeared at the office of the Inspector of the Military Academy, for, in those days, there was such an office and such an officer, as prospective candidates to appear for entrance examination, either in June or the last week of August, 1862. No such number did we count on the roll, as called by Cadet Color Corporal Clarke, one of the soldierly three, "turned out over plebes", to appear before them less than three years thereafter, hobbling on crutches because of the Enfield bullet that shot out of saddle, just after Five Forks, the dashing adjutant of the "First Dragoons", as they still called themselves. It is good to record of the other two, generals for many years with long and most enviable records, they still survive among the few representatives of the little class of 1864.* Barely eighty strong, we were in uniform, in camp and, some of us at least, in ranks at Guard Mounting early in July. "Gyahd Mount", we called it, following the dominant way of the sons of the sunny South who, though arrayed almost to a man in the armies of Lee, Johnston and Beauregard, had left their impress upon our ways of speech, however different it might have been with our political opinions.

The dialects of the wide West—in our case those of Kentucky, New England, the Middle and the Mississippi Valley States—were to be heard on every hand as the plebes of '62 began to scrape acquaintance, and it was then and there that many of our number, for the first time, listened to the broad and precise intonation of cultured Boston. As announced by the bearer of the name, to the intense rejoicing and merriment of irreverent and inquisitive "yearlings", he was "Mr. Frahn cis Lowell Hills, of Massachusetts", which was about all they extracted from him. A silent fellow was he, reserved and somewhat diffident, with a manner more suggestive of secluded, studious hours than of exuberant boyhood.

Pure in speech and thought, refined, well bred, exquisitely neat in garb and precise in conduct, Hills became prominent in the class before the miseries of plebe camp were half completed, and, once in barracks, the excellent order of his room, his alcove, his half of the so-called clothes press, his every item of attire, from pompon to polished shoe tip, proclaimed him of Puritan stock and lineage, even had not his family ties been the subject of incessant interrogation on the part of his would-be tormentors.

It was in 1638 that his ancestor, Mr. Joseph Hills, Counsellor at Law, came to New England from Malden, Essex County, England, and in 1649, as one of its most distinguished founders, settled in Malden, Massachusetts, where, for many years, he stood prominent among the men of the old Bay Colony, and in whose honor the name "Malden" had been given to the town. A gentleman of education, by title "Mr.", and the importance of his high position in England being justly recognized, he was soon called into public service, first as Selectman in Charlestown, in 1644, as Representative in the House of Deputies, then Speaker of the House, and in 1648 drew up the first codification of the laws of the colony. Mr. Joseph Hills also served as Associate for the County Court, was Captain of Malden's "Training Band" and was granted 500 acres of land on the Nashua River and freed from public assessments in recognition by the General Court of the great value of his public services. Other ancestors were among the passenger list of the renowned Mayflower, and both in the French and Indian wars and the Massachusetts line in the Revolution their names were on the muster roll; so, too, when the sons of the old Bay State marched in such numbers to the music of the Union, the great grandson of these old-time Americans was among the foremost, and the black band of mourning broke out on many another sleeve that beautiful spring of 1864, Frank Hills' among them, for the eldest of the brothers three, Captain Joseph Snow Hills, already sorely wounded, was shot dead in the fierce grapple in the Wilderness. He had been through sixteen engagements and was within a few weeks of completing his three years' enlistment.

On the mother's side, too, there were many men of military service and renown. She, Harriott Frances Robbins, was the daughter of prominent families, long resident in Boston, as had been the father, Joseph Snow Hills. Both these devoted parents, however, died before Frank Hills was eight years of age, from which time he and the two elder brothers were taken in charge and tenderly reared by a sister of their mother, and they had every advantage that duty and deep affection could suggest.

With such a lineage, it is easy to account for the fact that, from the day he donned the uniform of the gray battalion, Frank Hills was marked as one of the most "military" men of his class.

Tall, finely built and proportioned though never robust, devoted to his duties in each successive grade and a model in conduct, he was our Color Sergeant in the early summer of '64, and became Sergeant Major when the class returned from furlough. In scholarship he averaged well, as was to be expected of a graduate of the Massachusetts public schools and the Franklin medalist of the Phillips Grammar School—the prized trophy provided for in the will of Benjamin Franklin. He was admitted to the English High School on Bedford Street, Boston, July 25th, 1861.

Commissioned, on graduation, in the Fifth Artillery and assigned to DuPont's famous Light Battery, then stationed at Fortress Monroe, he was another of our class to be occasionally on duty near the person of Jefferson Davis, the most distinguished of the captives ever mured within the ramparts of what was then the greatest of our old-fashioned fortifications, and with whom, as a fellow graduate of West Point, Hills had many pleasant conversations on subjects of mutual interest. Contrary to current opinion, Mr. Davis was provided with every comfort and slept most peacefully through the night, while it was on the young officer on guard, in trying to keep awake, that the greater hardship was imposed. Hills served out much of the first two years under Captain DuPont, who, being graduated at the head of his class, had nonetheless declined a commission in the Engineers in favor of the fighting field artillery. But promotion to the grade of first lieutenant came to Hills in March '68, a transfer to the Third Regiment also had been effected and with deep regret, he left Captain DuPont, little dreaming what their future relations would be. He was stationed for over a year at Fort Adams, Newport, Rhode Island, a most delightful post where, against the military discipline of General "Tim" Sherman, as he was called, who was in command, he had the audacity to contemplate matrimony. A story could be written of the trials and tribulations to which the young officer was subjected. Finally, not being able to stop the marriage, the General trumped up charges and put him in arrest a few days before the date set for his wedding, which was to take place in Boston. Friends and officers higher up were appealed to, with the result that a leave was telegraphed from Washington just in time for the prospective groom to reach the church at high noon, the hour of the ceremony. Taking his bride to Fort Adams after a short honeymoon, she had an opportunity, herself, to experience military discipline. An attractive set of quarters had been prepared for her, altogether too pretentious for a mere lieutenant, so the General turned them out and they were obliged to move into a small cottage outside the Fort.

Hills spent a year at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, and then came the order to proceed to the Dry Tortugas, which meant veritable exile and isolation, and as physicians forbade his taking his young wife, he went alone with his regiment to this most desolate post where several of the Lincoln Conspirators were incarcerated, and already one of his classmates, Orr, had died of the dreaded yellow fever. Having been made Ordnance Officer, it was his duty to superintend the mounting of the new battery of heavy guns on the parapet at Fort Jefferson. He worked in the broiling, tropical sun of that wretched "key", where stronger men than Hills had broken down, until he fell unconscious; a severe illness followed and as soon as it was safe to move him on a stretcher, he was put on board a transport and sent home. After his leave of absence had expired, he was in no condition to return, and then he began seriously to ponder over the prospects.

Before closing the brief story of his service in the Army and because of its consequence, it should be stated that when, late in '61, Congressman Alexander H. Rice, afterwards Governor of Massachusetts, had notified his constituents of a prospective vacancy at the Point, no less than 65 ambitious young men had succeeded in getting their names upon the list of applicants before that of Francis Lowell Hills, and more, doubtless, followed. Being himself unable to decide between so many, Mr. Rice assembled a committee of men of prominence in his district, headed by Judge Thomas Russell. No less than three examinations proved necessary, the competitors being known to the Board only by a certain number. Yet, when the papers were examined, it was discovered that he who had entered sixty-sixth on the list had come out first, or highest, on each and every test, and number sixty-six proved to be the tall, blue-eyed lad from Roxbury, Francis Lowell Hills. "Honorable preeminence" having been accorded him, as wrote Mr. Rice, the letter of appointment speedily followed, and in this manner was Hills' entrance to the great National Academy accomplished in June, 1862.

Now, however, like Upham of his own class and several others, Hills was not long in making up his mind to accept the year's pay tendered by Congress to the younger graduates who were content to quit in order to create vacancies for deserving volunteers in the Civil War, and as he was unwilling to desert his regiment for a more desirable post, he accepted the offer of the Government, a decision he never regretted, for one of his classmates was thirty-one years awaiting a Captaincy. He left the Army and "swung out his shingle", as was the saying of the day, choosing for his future service the profession of civil engineering, but those were days when engineers were plenty and jobs were few. It took the nation as much as a decade to settle down to normalcy after the Civil War, and for a time, Hills occupied the position of Military Instructor and Professor of Modern Languages at the State College at Orono, Maine, now the University of Maine. Here he commanded a battalion of cadets, the rank of Major having been conferred upon him by the Governor, and after two year's careful training taking them to Augusta, the capital of the State, for general muster, the Battalion attracted much attention and was highly commended by the Governor for its fine military bearing and exemplary conduct. The third year, the finances of the college having fallen off, the Government detailed a young officer, free of expense, to the Department of Military Tactics. Hills remained there long enough to leave an indelible impress on the Maine Cadet Battalion, and then, after a year or two in the Light House Department of our Engineer Corps, found an opening in a line which had long appealed to him. He had taken time while in Boston to locate and survey a railway from Framingham, encircling the "Hub" and connecting all the roads there centering. It was good work. It won him the consideration of prominent railroad officials, among them that famous cavalry leader of the Civil War, Major General James Harrison Wilson, distinguished graduate of West Point and at that time president of the New York and New England Railway. Hills had also been recently elected a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and when he accepted the responsible position which General Wilson had at once offered him on his road, there began a friendship and association that lasted a life time, for the elder graduate saw in the younger many a trait that won his confidence and led to Hills rapid advancement from Engineer Supervisor in 1880, to Engineer of Roads, Bridges and Buildings from 1881 to 1884.

Those were happy days for Hills. The work was congenial and he loved it, winning more and more the regard and respect of the president, and when that road changed hands and General Wilson returned to his home at Wilmington, Delaware, finding that Colonel Henry A. DuPont was looking for a man of ability to fill the office of Chief Engineer of Maintenance of Way on the Wilmington and Northern Rail Road, of which he was president, General Wilson recommended Hills without delay and Colonel DuPont, remembering with pleasure the young officer who was assigned to his battery at Fortress Monroe, at once offered him the position. Fifteen of the happiest years of his life followed. His surroundings, both social and professional, were most congenial. There his three young daughters grew to womanhood and formed friendships that time can never lessen in constancy and devotion.

Then came the trouble with Spain over Cuban affairs, General Wilson's return to the Army as a corps commander, and, heartily backed for the command of the Sixth Massachusetts Infantry, Hills vainly applied to the War Department for active service. But, the Guardsmen of the nation having been mobilized under their own officers, while there were but forty thousand Spanish troops in Cuba, the Government had more troops than were needed. A military commission being denied him, Hills lost no time in getting to the front among the auxiliaries. At this period of our history, graduates by the dozen in civil life made urgent appeal for commission and military employment, but without result.

Being a prominent Charter Member of the Society of Founders and Patriots of America, the Society, with that of The Empire State Sons of the Revolution, made Hills the chairman of their Relief Committees, placing large sums of money in his hands for the work. He visited the army hospitals, studying their needs, supplying all manner of comforts and delicacies to the sick and suffering soldiers, many of whom in the Southern camps, had never left the country, disbursing thousands of dollars contributed by patriotic citizens, as well as a large part of the Lipton fund, and accounting for every cent that passed through his hands. He rendered a service, probably, of far greater value than the command of a regiment. Then when that brief war came to its close, he was publicly commended in terms of highest praise and appreciation, and the following resolution was published by the Society of the Sons of the Revolution:

"Resolved, that the Empire State Society, Sons of the American Revolution, desires to record its obligation to Major Francis Lowell Hills of Wilmington, Delaware, for the unselfish and efficient aid which he has accorded to the Society and its committee in the work it has done in the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers, sailors and marines of our country, suffering in hospitals from wounds and disease contracted in the Spanish-American War. Major Hills will ever be a welcome guest among us and we shall not forget his sympathetic and whole-souled cooperation with us in the work".

Just at that time, the Wilmington and Northern Railroad was sold to the Reading System and Hills was again without a position, but only for a few weeks. The Governor General of Porto Rico (Brigadier General Guy V. Henry, U. S. A.), needed an Engineer of high standing and experience to fill the office of Director of Public Works in that newly acquired territory. He cabled his request to Washington, and within the month, Hills had reported for duty at San Juan, promptly and earnestly recommended by the Chief of Engineers, General John M. Wilson, and there took hold of the situation with his characteristic vim and thoroughness. He lived at the Palace with General Henry, as a member of his household. His work was arduous and extensive, practically covering the entire island, and when, at the end of the year, a Civil Governor was appointed and General Henry returned to the States, Hills began to realize that duty in the tropics had many drawbacks, especially under new political conditions with which he was not in sympathy. The intense heat and close confinement to work were telling upon his health. He had never fully recovered from the effects of that exposure and fever at the Dry Tortugas, and one year of Porto Rico was enough to undermine a stouter frame than his, while two would probably have wound up his earthly career. Although several petitions were sent to Washington by the Porto Ricans for him to remain, he felt it would be wiser to return to his home in Wilmington, where his family had continued to reside during his absence. In May, 1899, General Henry issued a special order, highly commending his work and service, and the Secretary of War, on Hill's arrival in Washington, was urgent that he, as soon as his health would permit, return to San Juan and go on with the good work.

But it was not to be. His health would permit no further exposure to tropical suns. His hearing had become somewhat impaired and his only brother, Edwin A. Hills of Boston, was urging him to give up active work that they might pass the remaining years of their lives together. This meant, practically, the close of his professional career, but not, necessarily, a life of leisure, as long as the rest of his faculties were perfectly preserved and there was anything he could do for the benefit and pleasure of others, for Hills, with his unselfish nature, seemed never so happy himself as when sacrificing his own time and comfort in the interest of someone else. He had been for long years most actively employed and it was now high time for him to retire from the field, and with his beloved wife and daughter settle down somewhere near his birthplace in the old Bay State. Friends and kindred were there in number, and West Point, the spot he loved above all others, was barely a day's journey away. Joining the Association of Graduates at its birth, in 1869, he became one of its most enthusiastic members, seldom missing a meeting, with only two or three exceptions, and often bringing with him his daughters and their young girl friends.

He chose for his permanent residence the quaint old town of Marblehead, by the sea, and there in the peace and comfort of a most delightful home, the last years of his life were passed.

He had married, the year after his graduation, Miss Elizabeth Keith Nichols, daughter of George Henry Nichols, M. D., of Boston, and Sarah Atherton, his wife. Dr. Nichols, one of the most prominent physicians of his day, a distinguished graduate of Harvard, also of the University of Pennsylvania, was a direct descendant of Mary Chilton, of that world-renowned Pilgrim passenger list of 1620, and as Hills himself was direct in line from Peter Brown of the Mayflower, the blood of the foremost settlers of Massachusetts flowed in the veins of his daughters, a fact ever a source of pride to him.

A man of his active temperament could not be idle. Having been elected a member of the New England Historic-Genealogical Society and the Essex Institute of Salem, he devoted much of his time to Historical, Genealogical Research, and his work was thorough and exact. He compiled his own family history, as well as that of his wife and of many of his friends, entirely in his own hand writing, which in its remarkable beauty and clearness, added greatly to the interest and value of the books. His letters also showed not the slightest sign of the infirmities of age, always the same old cheery tone, and each succeeding week found him looking forward to June and the joyous assembly of graduation week. Miss it, he could not, nor could he be content without bestirring every surviving member of '66—pitifully few had they become by 1925. Life and home were filled for him with many interests, with the sunshine of love, with the devotion of wife and children, the constant companionship of his older brother, the honor and esteem of the sturdy New England citizens by whom he was surrounded. Always happy in striving to bring to those who needed its help something of the comfort and gladness ever radiating from his own cheery fireside, once again he was waiting impatient for the day that should mark the assembly under the shadow of the grim, gray walls of the school he held peerless on the face of the earth.

And then the summons came.

"Never felt better in my life", was practically the final word of a letter to one of the few survivors. "Never looked better" might well have been added, for his erect, soldierly carriage, his clear, cloudless eyes, his springy step were the observed of all who saw him that day, the very last of his life on earth. Soldierly and subordinate, Frank Hills had faced his Conqueror—our classmate at the sound of whose powerful voice the assembled graduates, year after year, had "come to attention" in support of the Hills resolution,—now in turn, obeyed in silence when his orders came.

On the 27th of February, 1925, in his eighty-first year, he was suddenly stricken with cerebral hemorrhage and passed away a few hours later, in the early evening, without a moment's consciousness of leaving those he loved. He had lived to celebrate his Golden Wedding and his death was the first break in his home circle in fifty-seven years, a home rare indeed in its peace, its harmony, its exquisite atmosphere of love and devotion. To her who has shared his every joy and sorrow, to the daughters who were his pride and comfort, there lives the consolation that in full measure he received it at their hands—that through them life was sweet. Those of us who best knew and cared for him, grieved not a little that at the end, there was denied him the privilege on which he had set his heart, that of sleeping the last sleep in the little cemetery at the foot of old Crow Nest. It could not be, as a recent ruling had gone into effect that only those who die in active service are to be laid in the West Point Cemetery. For his final resting place, a suitable spot was chosen in Mount Auburn, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Among the throng of graduates assembled at West Point in 1925, there was many a man who missed the tall form and ringing voice at the closing moment of the business session—the voice now stilled until he shall be summoned yet once again to answer to roll call on the last great day.

He is survived by his wife, three daughters, four grand-children and an elder brother, Edwin A. Hills of Boston, Massachusetts, who has one son to carry down the name, George E. Hills, a prominent attorney in Boston.

His daughters are Martha Higginson Hills, Adeline Robbins, the wife of George Coit Butts of Norwich, Connecticut, and Sara Atherton, wife of Henry Atherton Nichols of Cambridge, Massachusetts.

LOTUS NILES

No. 2554. Class of 1875.

Died, Feb. 28, 1925, at New York, N. Y., aged 72 years.

Lotus Niles was born February 5, 1853, in Belleville, Illinois. He came of good fighting stock, as his father, Judge Nathaniel Niles, a most eminent lawyer in Southern Illinois, had served as a Colonel in the Mexican War and again as a Colonel in the Civil War. He was also equipped with high mental gifts which brought him out "in the fives"—a star graduate—and this mental ability made the hard course at West Point always a source of keen interest to him and a pleasure.

He was able, with apparently little effort, to maintain a high standing in his class. His personality was marked by a sunny nature and a genial manner combined with a brilliant mind, making him always desirable in the company of his friends. He was a ready raconteur. To his friends he was ever faithful and loyal, seeing only the good and speaking ill of no man.

He entered the U. S. Military Academy, July 1, 1870, being appointed from the State of Illinois, and graduated, June 16, 1875. He was promoted 2nd Lieutenant, 2nd Artillery, and served in garrison at Fort McHenry, Md., San Antonio, Texas, Fort Monroe, Va., (Artillery School for Practice) and other Artillery Stations in the East, always with credit.

The beginning of the War with Spain found him a Captain of Artillery. He served in Cuba in command of the Post of Santa Clara Battery, Havana, and at Columbia Barracks, Cuba, until April, 1902. Promoted Major, Sept. 11, 1902, he was placed in command of the Field Artillery Battalion, Fort Sam Houston, Texas. On the separation of the Field and Coast Artillery he was assigned to the 3rd Field Artillery at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, as Lieut.-Colonel.

Promoted Colonel, Field Artillery, August 12, 1907, he commanded in Post of Fort Sam Houston, Texas, October 25, 1907, to date of his retirement at his own request after over 40 years of service, May 5, 1911.

After retirement he resided for a time at San Antonio, Texas, afterwards making his home in New York City. He was a member of the Army and Navy Club, New York, for many years, and of the Union Club, New York, for 25 years. He never married.

His friends will mourn him in their hearts for socially he was one of the most genial of men and full of kindly humor.

THOMAS TAYLOR FRISSELL

No. 3780. Class of 1897.

Died, May 15, 1925, at the Letterman Hospital, Presido of San Francisco, aged 53 years.

Frissell, the eldest of ten children, was born at Oak Ridge, Mo., June 6, 1872. He was brought up and finished high school there and had entered St. Vincent's College, when in 1888 the family moved to Cape Girardeau, Mo. His father was a civil engineer and Frissell during his school vacations, beginning at the age of twelve, helped him in surveying work. At eighteen he was surveying on his own account. It is characteristic of Frissell that he should have described his occupation at this time as "jack-leg" civil engineer. He was appointed to the Military Academy from Missouri in 1893 and graduated with his class in 1897, standing No. 39 in a class of 67.

Frissell was gifted, especially in mathematics and could have been among the stars in class standing had he cared to apply himself. But he was too full of mischief for this and furthermore the iron discipline of West Point was not at all to his liking. His ingenious mind was ever busy, endeavoring to outwit the tactical officers and contriving daring "stunts" for the delectation of the Corps of Cadets. For instance, one afternoon, he rolled a keg of beer across the Area, past the Commandant's office, and hid it above the fourth floor ceiling of the seventh division, where he served drinks to his friends until the keg was dry. There is no need to point out to graduates the risks involved in this exploit. As a plebe, his "technical name" was a masterpiece and even dignified first classmen came from other companies to be entertained by his famous recitation.

He was exceptionally strong in his likes and dislikes; a staunch and loyal friend through thick and thin and an enemy who made no attempt to conceal his animosities. He hated cant, hypocrisy and selfishness and was quick to see and condemn these characteristics in others. To me, his outstanding trait, was a tender sympathy and solicitude for the unfortunate.

After graduation in 1897, he was attached to the 23rd Infantry in Texas and in the fall of that year, transferred to the 3d Infantry at Fort Snelling and served with that regiment through the Santiago Campaign and Philippine Insurrection. In this service, he became badly infected with tropical germs and for many years there was a struggle between the iron strength of the great football player and the hosts of malignant parasites. Shortly before his death the doctors told me that but for his magnificent constitution he must have died twenty years before.

In 1908 he was regimental quartermaster of the 24th Infantry and from that service passed regularly into the work of the quartermaster corps.

By 1913 his health had become so undermined that he was given extended sick leave and with his only child, Duncan, the "class baby" and true chip off the old block, spent most of his time in outdoor recreation. Let me quote an excerpt from his son's letter concerning these times. The boy speaks of his father as "Tom" and it was like

Frissell that this unconventional relationship should have existed between them. Duncan says: "After being on sick leave for about two years, Tom was retired in April 1915 at San Diego." "Tom and I spent most of our time hunting and fishing in Southern and Lower California, trying to get his health back." "Usually these trips were family affairs but sometimes we had others with us."

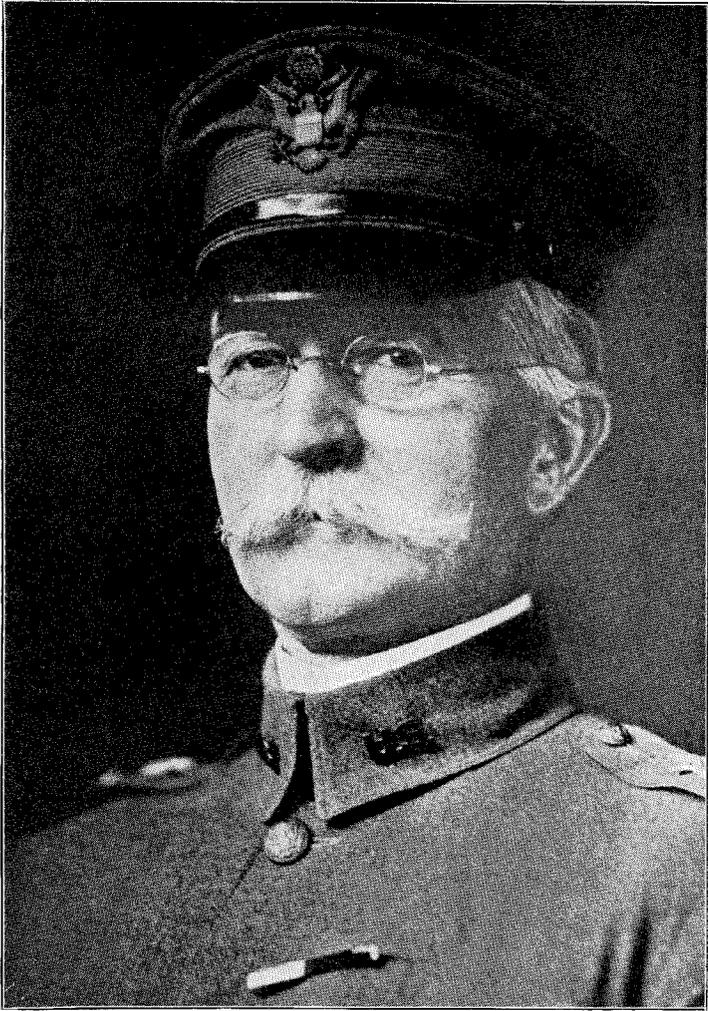

"During this time I really learned to know Tom—his wonderful stamina, sportsmanship and thought for others—and neglect of himself." "I don't think there was ever a father and son more congenial."

That Frissell must have keenly enjoyed these days with his boy, notwithstanding his general illness, any father and sportsman may well believe. Frissell, himself, was a marvel with the shotgun and he told me with pride that his son shot quite as well as he did.

In 1916, Frissell, now on the retired list, was employed by the American Rolling Mills Co., of Middleton, Ohio, at a very large salary but had held this position only a few months, when the war came on and he was recalled to active duty. First as quartermaster at Fort Ontario and later at Plattsburg Barracks. He could not, however, stand the cold winter there and was transferred to San Francisco, where he remained until the close of the war. He was then placed on recruiting duty in that city and remained on this work until his death. Through all the years of his service, he was known as a hard working conscientious and able officer. His admiration for and devotion to his wife was beautiful and after her sudden death in 1919 it was extremely difficult for him to adjust himself to his loss. I went to see him, several months before his passing and just after one of his bad spells. It had been years since we had met and in the gaunt, wasted man with white hair, I could scarcely discern the magnificent cadet of former times. But his spirit was unbroken—was never broken. He refused to admit to himself or to others that his days were numbered and laughed and joked with much of his old time joyousness. The head nurse of the officer's ward at the Letterman Hospital, told me with tears in her eyes that he was the most wonderful patient that she had ever had. That through all his suffering he was unselfish and uncomplaining; humorous, kindly, appreciative and courageous to the very last.

As the morning sun glistened on the brass buttons and rifles of the funeral escort, about to fire the last shots over poor Frissell; as the melancholy strains of the dead march drifted slowly back through the tall eucalyptus trees of the Presido to the flag draped caisson and riderless black horse, I gazed across the peaceful waters of the ocean channel that leads to the setting sun and there came over me—one of the pall bearers—recollections of days long past. A vision of West Point in the gala days of June with Romance, like an Indian summer haze, enveloping with its glamor the hills and winding waters of the Hudson, the great trees, wide green parades and historic buildings. There, segregated from the sordid realities of life, in an assemblage of warriors young, buoyant, trained in body, disciplined in mind, cultivated in ethics, moving in the sparkle of brass buttons and the exhilaration of martial music, could I distinguish the tall, handsome cadet, Thomas Taylor Frissell.

He saw not the sweating anxiety of the officer's responsibility in an approaching combat. He smelt not at dawn the haunting odor of crushed vegetation and blood on the trodden bivouac of the battlefield.

He heard not the listless sighing of lonely winds through the bamboo and palm. He felt not the hands of disease and death, pressing out slowly the freshness of his youth. Then he was an eagle soaring high in the glory of the morning and now he is fallen in the sombre canon of death.

WILLIAM HARDING CARTER

No. 2502. Class of 1873.

Died, May 24, 1925, at Washington, D. C., aged 73 years.

William Giles Harding Carter was seventh in descent from Giles and Hannah Carter who were living in Henrico, County, Virginia, in 1676. It has not been possible to connect his line with others of the same name in Virginia and Gloucestershire, England, at an earlier date, but there are many good reasons to believe that they were all of the same family.

A large emigration of Carters from Virginia to the Western States took place in the early part of the nineteenth century. Among others the grandfather of William settled at Franklin, Tennessee. Samuel, the father went to Nashville where William was born in 1851, and where the family was living at the time of the Civil War.

Samuel Carter was not in sympathy with the secession movement and did not join in the general flight of the residents on the appearance of the Federal army. The family remained there and the young William at the age of twelve years found sufficient favor with the invading army to be employed in the quartermaster's Department as a mounted messenger during several months at the time when it was organized for the defense of the City in 1864-5. At this time he also attracted the friendly notice and approval of Generals George H. Thomas and Richard W. Johnson who did not forget to give him timely aid and advice at later periods in his career.

The elder Carter decided to avoid the unsettled conditions of life in a Southern city during the reconstruction period, so he moved his family to New York after the close of the war.

President Andrew Johnson had long been a friend of the family and had also been under some obligations to Samuel Carter. On learning that William was anxious to follow a military career he gave him an "At Large" appointment to the Military Academy when he was sixteen years of age. He entered in 1869 and graduated in 1873, standing 35 in a class of 41. The loss of educational facilities on account of the Civil War was a serious disadvantage to the Southern Cadets at that time, but it does not seem to have hampered their subsequent career.

After graduation, as a Lieutenant in the 8th Infantry and 6th Cavalry, and as a Captain of the 6th Cavalry, Carter had active service in Wyoming, Nebraska, Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado, during the strenuous years from 1873 to 1893, only broken by a two year tour of duty on recruiting service.

Now that the dazzling events of the World War have displaced the Indian Wars and the hardships of the frontier there is a tendency to forget those days of winter cold and summer heat, empty sack and dry canteen, rations of horse meat without an onion or a spud; fighting an enemy who had been warriors from immemorial tradition. An empire of land was made available to the white man for his farms and villages. In this Carter played his part and earned the favor of his superiors—some of whom we know were not easy to please.

In 1893, Carter was called to duty at Fort Leavenworth with his troop, and was detailed as Assistant Instructor in the Department of Cavalry during two years. Fort Leavenworth, like West Point, had spent years in finding itself but was then beginning to drop the handicap of a poor start. West Point began as a School for Artillerists and Engineers, and the Fort Leavenworth School, in the words of General Sherman, was established in 1881-2 for officers who had not the benefit of a West Point education. In January 1897, Carter was appointed Assistant Adjutant General with the rank of Major and was ordered to Washington.

The days preceding the war with Spain gave a chance to see the peculiar mental phenomena of a nation preparing for war and yet using political methods to lower the efficiency of the only military force which was ready for war. Many untrained civilians were appointed to high places. Regular officers were informed that only a few could be advanced. The Civil War had taught no lesson.

Major Carter was a member of the Medal of Honor Board which voted to postpone consideration of the Roosevelt Medal when it was found that a senator was urging the President to have it awarded at once in view of the important influence that it would have in the approaching election of a Governor of New York, in which the Colonel was a candidate. This effort to protect the Medal of Honor drew upon the board much bitter comment.

The purpose of this medal was to reward extraordinary heroism, beyond the requirements of duty. To have given it would have been an unjust discrimination. At a later period when the record was shown to President Roosevelt by the Secretary of War he stated that the board had done right, although its final action was to decline to recommend the medal.

Notwithstanding his profound admiration for President Roosevelt, Carter considered it his duty to leave a solemn protest against the Colonel's reference in his memoirs to "The routine, elderly, regular officer, who knew nothing whatever of Modern War and was in most respects nearly as worthless as a raw recruit".

Carter's answer to this is to give a list of the officers thus referred to, all veterans of the Civil War and of many Indian Wars, who fought the same enemy on the same day as the Colonel did, with the result that more than one half of them were killed or wounded. Another was killed two years later at Tientsin, China.

After the Spanish American War it was evident that serious faults had grown into the military service during the years of comparative peace which followed the disbandment of the great armies which fought the Civil War. The position of General of the army had lost prestige while the adjutant general and the Chiefs of bureaus acknowledged no authority except that of the Secretary of War. Under these anomalous conditions, Elihu Root was put at the head of the War Department and chose Carter, a junior officer, as his principal advisor in the preparation of all Congressional legislation except appropriation bills and the necessary orders to carry out the policies of the War Department. Of this work the secretary wrote in his report for 1903:

"Special credit is due to Brigadier-General W. H. Carter for ability and industry in devising the General Staff Law". "If the new system shall prove to be an improvement the gain to the Country will have been largely due to him".

Again at the time of Carter's retirement from active service in 1915, Mr. Root wrote:

"I know of no one retiring from active service who leaves a record of more valuable service than you". "We made it possible for steps to be taken toward a more adequate military system which would have been wholly impossible before".

On still another occasion Mr. Root congratulating him on his work on the new school system for the army and the army reorganization act after the Spanish-American War.

During his tour of duty in Washington, Carter was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel in the Adjutant General's Department and Brigadier General of the line.

In January, 1904, General Carter was relieved from duty in Washington and ordered to the Philippines where he commanded a Department until the latter part of 1905, when he returned to the United States to command the Department of the Lakes for several years and the Department of the Missouri in 1908. The year 1909 found him once again in the Philippines with the rank of Major General. On the request of Secretary of War, Dickinson, he was assigned to duty in Washington once more, as Assistant Chief of Staff. While on this duty, when disturbances on the Mexican border called for the concentration of fourteen regiments at San Antonio, Carter was assigned to command in 1911. At the close of 1912 he was relieved from the General Staff and placed in command of the Central Department with Headquarters at Chicago. Following this was the command of the Second Division at Texas City and Galveston for a year. General Carter's last assignment while on the active list was that of the Department of Hawaii, which lasted until his retirement from active service by operation of law in November, 1915.

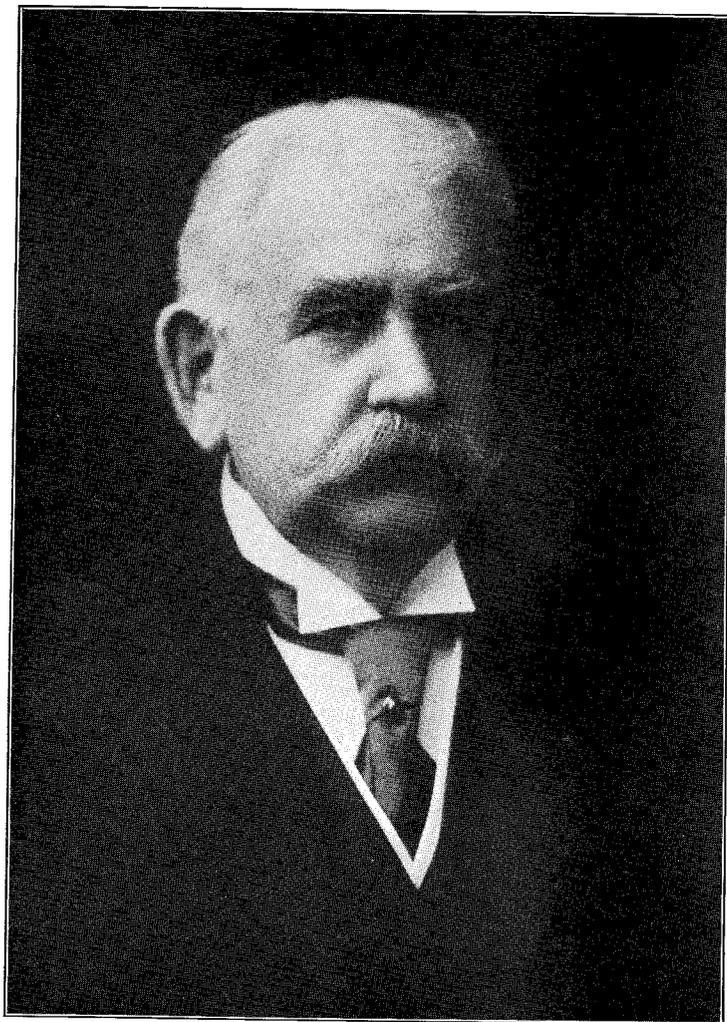

The retired list was not destined to be a haven of rest for General Carter. It was then evident that the United States would sooner or later join in the European War and he was called to active duty with the Senate Military Committee in preparing the National Defense Act, for five months in 1916. On completion of this work the chairman of the Committee wrote:

"Your advice on every question involved in this legislation (was) of the greatest value".

When the Country finally began its active preparation for war, General Carter was again called to duty in command of the Central Department, consisting of fifteen States. A hundred and fifty thousand troops of the National Army were fitted out and moved to camps and cantonments, from August 26, 1917, to March 20, 1918. On June 3, 1918, after 50 years of service, General Carter was finally retired from active service.

He wrote with ease and fluency. From his earliest years he kept a careful diary of events. Much of his published writings on military affairs consisted of magazine articles on Historical and Professional subjects. Among more important works were "Horses, Saddles and Bridles" which went through numerous editions; "From Yorktown to Santiago with the Sixth Cavalry"; "Giles Carter of Virginia, a genealogical memoir"; "The American Army"; "Life of Lieutenant General Chaffee"; "Horses of the World". During 1915 he was awarded the first prize by the Military Service Institution of the United States in the Reeves Memorial Essay Competition. He received silver medals from the same source, for an essay entitled "Can the United States Fulfill its Mission?" in 1916; and again for an essay on "Prophets of Preparedness" in 1917.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL CHARLES E. L. B. DAVIS

General Carter was awarded a Medal of Honor for distinguished bravery in action against hostile Apache Indians in rescuing, with the voluntary assistance of two soldiers, the wounded from under a heavy fire of hostile Indians at Cibicu Creek, Arizona, August 30, 1881.

He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for especially meritorious and conspicuous services as department commander, Central Department, August 26, 1917—March 13, 1918.

CHARLES EDWARD LAW BALDWIN DAVIS

No. 2117. Class of 1866.

Died, June 1, 1925, at Atlantic City, N. J., aged 81 years.

The story of the graduation exercises of the Class of 1866 is, in the light of later days, a strange one, yet no one of its members seemed to bemoan the fact that judging by the attendance at the ceremony, it had not a friend in the world.

It had become accustomed to neglect. There had been three of its years when West Point seemed living under a pall; when the black badge of mourning was on many a cadet sleeve; when through the bleak winters, at slow time, with arms reversed and fingers numb in the thin white gloves, with many of our band instruments silenced because of frozen valves, the little battalion waded through the snow drifts out to the shrouded cemetery to pay last honors to graduates slain in some one of the score of battlefields throughout the southland; three years of monotonous mourning, turned suddenly into delirious joy with the tidings from Appomattox, and General Cullum, our superintendent, set the Highlands of the Hudson aroar with all manner of guns, the old 42's bellowing from Battery Knox, the big sea coast Columbiads answering from the river's brink, followed even by the whelp-like bark of the little field piece, hauled by hand to the rocky crest of old Fort Put.

It seemed long before the Academy could again settle down to business. Even when June came round a second time, and forty of the forty-one members of the graduating class had for the last time faced the academic board, they were relieved from military duty except parade, bidden to return to quarters and be patient; furthermore, to behave as well as was possible with demerit no longer counting; whereupon it sauntered all day long about the neighborhood, or sunned itself on the hotel piazza, or went down and listened to band practice, with coats unbuttoned and hanging loose in many cases, as the only method of advertising to the local world that the wearers were graduates of the United States Military Academy.

Not until a week after the last examinations did '66 set up an answering yell to the shrill summons of the acting officer-of-the-day, "Graduating Class, turn out! Side arms and dress hats!" Equipped in which fashion, we dove in column of twos into the dark depths of the basement of "the old academic"; emerged into the brilliant sunshine flooding its eastern facade; passed the rear entrance of the little chapel, midway between the Academic and the Library building, the same chapel which today, stone for stone, just as it looked in '66, stands flanking the entrance to the cemetery; at last finally brought up standing at the west doorway of the Library building, in the west end of which were the offices of the Superintendent and Adjutant, and there, after a moment or two at attention, lapsed into Rest at the command of our Head.

A nursemaid with a baby carriage, rounding the Library building, finding further progress southward blocked by the slender column in gray and white, stood irresolute barely ten paces away—otherwise not a soul was in sight. Presently a drum boy, with an armful of slender, cylindrical objects, came forth and stood at the top of the little flight of steps, whereupon a short, rather stout youth, near the head of column, wearing the insignia of a cadet captain, evoked a chorus of chuckles by a query in the cadet vernacular of the day, that, repeated to the present undergraduate body, would probably be unintelligible. He was obviously popular, but the chuckles ceased as a tall officer, peering at us through steel-rimmed spectacles, took position with the drum boy at his right. He wore the long-skirted, single-breasted frock coat prescribed for officers below the grade of major, and that coat was unfastened from neck to knee. Adams, our Head, gave the command Attention, and silence fell upon the scene. Taking one of the long white cylinders, the officer—for it was the academic adjutant, Captain Edward C. Boynton, 11th Infantry—looked us casually over, read out a name pencilled on the scroll, a cadet stepped forward with extended hand and stepped back to his place in the ranks, unfastened the bit of ribbon by which his prize was confined, and curiously studied the contents. In the same offhand manner our staff officer handed out the rest of the bundle in the drum boy's arms until all were gone. In less than ten minutes the supply was exhausted and still there remained a claimant—a tall, slender, square-shouldered fellow, whose freckled face went white and whose lips twitched uncontrollably, as with scant sympathy in tone the adjutant explained:—

"I don't find anything here for you, Mr C--" was all he said, as, without further ceremony, the official turned away, heedless also of the query: "How'll we get the other signatures, captain?" And then it was noted that in their haste to reach their mountain or sea shore haunts, no less than three of the Academic Board had failed to drop in at the adjutant's office and sign as presumably requested.

And so began and ended the proceedings through which the class of '66 received their sheepskins—all save one. Of him, it may be said that given another chance at the end of August, he passed triumphantly and joined the Fourth Cavalry in Texas. In such manner did the authorities of the Academy bid farewell to that "hard boning" aggregation, but not so did the Corps of Cadets when, in accordance with the fashion of the day, '66 said adieu to their comrades of the gray battalion.

Another day had dawned, the 18th, and though not yet relieved from duty nor released from pledge (given in our plebe year to save a man who later could not save himself) the class was up and doing soon after reveille, curious to see what it looked like in "cits". Two or three men, eager for home, took the early train at Garrison; several went up to the hotel for breakfast; most of us, took dinner for the last time with the Corps, preparatory to taking departure on the day boat, the old Armenia—calliope and all, by way of starting for New York at three o'clock.

Dinner half finished, the officer-in-charge sauntered forth into the sunshine and disappeared around the south end of the building where it was luncheon hour at the officers' mess, and where on this occasion two or three civilian guests with the bachelors of the post were assembled; when presently one of the former lifted up his voice and said: "Can that be thunder?" whereupon followed the explanation:—"That's the Corps saying goodbye to the graduates."

No dining room chairs had we in '66. From the first captain down to the last entered plebe, the battalion settled upon a curious, circular, wooden-seated, cast-iron stool, weighing some thirty pounds or more, uncouth in the last degree, but incomparable as stage property when thunder was needed. As a means of giving vent to enthusiasm or applause, neither voice nor hand was adequate, but when swung by muscular young arms and handled as vertical battering rams on that resounding oaken floor, the effect was something to deafen a boiler shop. The officer-in-charge, as was said, having considerably made himself scarce, there remained in the big, barewalled barn of an apartment, unadorned by portraits, unprovided even with racks for overcoats—we hung them on the floor,—perhaps eight score of stalwart youths in gray "coatees", and six score in what we then called "cits", one-third of these natty and new, the rest—miscellaneous.

The coatees were the garb of what remained of the battalion on duty—the new First and Third classes, '67 and '69, and the few of '68, who for minor delinquencies, were held back a day or two instead of going with their happier fellows already on furlough, and the new and natty, the members of the graduating class, taking, as has been said, their last dinner with their former comrades of the Corps.

There had been no rehearsal, no word of conference, yet every member seemed to know just what was expected of him and just when to start. It took too long to shake hands with everybody. Two or three at a time as dinner approached its close, members of the class from tables nearest the door, having said adieu to their immediate neighbors, sauntered leisurely toward the sunshiny archway, obviously trying to be unobtrusive. And then the white-trousered two hundred of those to remain, sprang from their seats and, grasping them in both hands, lifted the ponderous stools from the floor and began summarily to pound. Hat waving, smiling, self-conscious, perhaps, in some cases, they slowly sought the outer air, some few turning about at the head of the steps for one more look, rewarded by their own "tables" at least with an acceleration of the pounding, and still there clustered about a little group at the first captain's table, a dozen of the newly appointed cadet officers, privileged to leave their seats. Twice, thrice, had the trio made an effort to start for the door, but every time they were headed off. Obviously the leaders of '67 had something up their chevroned sleeves for those who had been leaders throughout the bygone year—especially about the eldest of the little group—and one of them, the center of enthusiastic interest, finding it impossible to break away, resigned himself to the wishes of the majority. He it was, who throughout the long twelve months had been the monarch of the mess hall—First Captain of the Corps of Cadets, proudest position, even then, in the possibilities of cadet honors, and first had he been not only in martial rank, but, as the most casual observer could see when at last there was clear passage to the archway, most popular beyond peradventure of the departing class. Slowly, therefore, these former magnates of the Corps began their onward passage, surrounded by their escort, to the outer world.

And then as it were, the battalion arose in its might. Only the newly arrived, the candidates, bewildered, embarrassed, remained seated. Then the thunder began again in amazing volume. Then even the occupants of the officers' mess, at the south end, came sallying forth, as pandemonium seemed to break loose in the resounding building. Pounding, hammering and now lending voice to swell the volume of sound, the resultant uproar utterly beggared any attempt at description, as what was left of the Corps of Cadets thundered its frantic farewell to the most popular "chief" it had known for an age.

Four years previous, among the new comers reporting at the adjutant's office, that thoroughbred Yankee (one of the victims of "Twig's Treason" in the spring of '61) glancing over the rim of those steel bows, and comparing the list in his hand with the name, age, residence, parentage etc. as written out in the hand of Mr. Charles E. L. B. Davis, late of the freshmen class at Yale, dryly remarked, "They'll call you 'Old Alphabet'", and ad finem they did. The first member of '66 to start with a nick name, he held the distinguishing title to the end. When the 50th anniversary drew nigh, acclaimed by his few remaining classmates, and years before chosen as their president, he instructed their adjutant and executive to write to every man of the dozen survivors—this in 1916,—pointing out that to dawdle about as we had done in '66 from the close of the final examination clear to the 18th would be sheer waste of time. "Make it the 8th or 9th" for our meeting, and loyally we answered his summons, and gathered about the round table to assemble as a class for the last time. At the next decennial—that of the month gone by—only three remained who could possibly attend—only one who did.

Four years as cadet and classmate, fifty years as fellow graduates, we had known him well. Every tenth year, when a possible thing, though ever with dwindling numbers, we had been represented among those present at graduation time, and when all is said and done in reaching our estimate, the name of him with whom the class is most intimately associated,—the name first to come to mind as representative of that class, the name most prominent and most popular, is that of "Old Alphabet" Davis.

First corporal and acting first sergeant of Company "A" in yearling camp of 1863, first sergeant of Company "A" in '64-5, First Captain, and of Company "A", throughout the First Class year, although in general standing ranked by Adams and Mercur, although in physical build among what might be called the lowest section, Davis fairly towered when it came to public estimate. Nor was it in the Corps alone this unsought honor was accorded him. The Tactical Department ever classed him foremost, retained as senior cadet officer in spite of the fact that he submitted without his signature, and forever flatly refused to sign the certificate of the cadet officer-of-the-day the morning following the tragedy of what, for half a century or more, has been referred to as the Boyd affair. Davis repeatedly declined to say that he had performed his duty, and stood fully prepared to turn over his sword and the tower room, second floor, first division, long held as the lair of the First Captain, yet no man was ever named to dispossess him.

John McLean Hildt, Captain, Third Infantry, and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel for heroism in the war—Hildt, who led the little battalion of regulars at Santa Rosa Island against the swarming gray coats of his former fellow cadet, Hallonquist—telling him to go to hell when summoned to surrender—Hildt, who was mightily respected by this younger battalion, little given as it was to hero worship, vanishing from the scene at four o'clock had made no reappearance as parade time drew nigh, yet remained on his detail to shake hands with the main offenders on their graduation. It was reported when the court martial assembled for the trial of the Cadet Adjutant, with two other cadet officers and one private, held culpable by the Court of Inquiry which investigated the affair, that General Cullum, our honored Superintendent, had asked the relief from duty of this officer, and it was suggested that Cadet Captain Davis, as officer-of-the-day, should be brought to trial on the same charge, but it was early established in the case of Colonel Hildt that nothing in the orders or regulations in force at the time, required the officer-in-charge to be present and supervise formation for undress parade, any more than that for supper roll-call, which in the bleak wintry evenings took place often in total darkness; furthermore that neither Hildt nor any one of the three other officers detailable had been in the habit of appearing at that function, it being, on the contrary, the custom for the officer-in-charge at the sounding of the four P. M. bugle announcing release from quarters, to adjourn to the officers' mess, and for the battalion of cadets to bolt tumultuously for the shoe blacks. As for Cadet Captain Davis, in refusing to sign the certificate, he furthermore said that he should have put summary stop to the proceedings, and would have done so had he had the faintest inkling of what was about to take place. As to this, however, both officer-in-charge and officer-of-the-day knew absolutely nothing of the program. Moreover, authority to put a stop to anything authorized and conducted by the Cadet Adjutant, the representative of the Commandant of Cadets and presumably acting under his orders, may not have been a prerogative even of the Cadet Officer-of-the-day. Moreover, again, as was his duty after receiving the report of the four company commanders, Davis was somewhere in barracks, looking up the two or three absentees, who probably were sound asleep over the lessons for the morrow, or feigning such surreptitious slumber at the beck of the cadet officers who had assembled in council immediately after dinner, to investigate the story of the cadet sentry who had found the marked and missing treasury notes between the leaves of the dictionary of the suspected cadet, a man who for months had lived utterly alone, "cut" by every member of his own class and many of the others. It was known that a stormy session had taken place in the little office of the Commandant of Cadets, upstairs in the old guard house, good old "Pompey" Black booming broadsides at the retiring officer-of-the-day, whose responses were calm, respectful, but firm. He would not sign that certificate, he stood self-accused, and as for interfering with the proceedings in which every other cadet officer but the quartermaster had his assigned place, Davis held that he should at least have made the endeavor, notwithstanding the fact that the battalion had had its lesson as to the authority of its adjutant long months before, in point of fact, on the evening of the very first undress parade at which he appeared in that capacity.

That was a matter oddly illustrative of the contrast between the almost perfect system of the present day with the somewhat slack methods obtaining during the days of the civil war and a short time thereafter;—the cadet officers of the graduating class immediately after "last parade", turning over their swords to those just designated in the last orders read to the Corps. But, as befell the Class of '66 in so many other ways, no such order had been published, and up to the hour of the departure of the Class of 1865, and so far as it knew when the hour for parade approached, the Corps of Cadets was headed by its sergeants. That being the case, there was no question in the minds of the members as to who should form it and take command. First call had been sounded by the orderly drummer; the first sergeants of "C" and "D" companies took the stations they had occupied throughout the year; the sergeant major, somewhat hesitant, appeared in front of the center.

Acting as Officer-of-the-day, was Davis himself, first Sergeant of "A" Company. The drum boys came swinging through the sallyport, and the members of the four companies, almost to a man and far less frolicsome than usual, were clustered about in readiness to fall in at the sounding of the second drum. The one significant gap was at the front and center of "B" Company. Its first sergeant was nowhere to be seen. His roommate, coming forth from the hallway of the Third Division, said he wasn't home and hadn't been there since 3:15, when a drum boy orderly had summoned him to the office, whence he had been seen going briskly up the road to the hotel.

Then of a sudden silence fell on the group nearest the sallyport, as with quick, nervous step, an official-looking envelope and package in his hand, came the First Sergeant in question, turned to his left as he issued from the stone archway and halted face to face with his senior, the sergeant major, and the latter "took in the situation" at a glance: "Are you to form the battalion?" he asked, and for answer the latest arrival could only hold forth the envelope and nod assent. The sergeant major, without a moment's hesitation, turned on his heel and stepped aside. The second drum called the companies to ranks and attention. A, C, and D closed on B, the color company, and were brought to parade rest. "Beat off" came the first order from the new incumbent; the field music sounded the flourishes and the retreat, and as the last note died away, in a clattering echo from the barrack walls, and afar out at the flag staff the old Monterey six-pounder answered with sullen bang. The battalion came to attention at the command of the lone figure at the front and center, and then in breathless silence, listened to the order naming the new cadet officers and non-commissioned officers for the ensuing academic year, with himself as adjutant, and in this informal and decidedly disappointing manner, the Class of '66 took control, as it were, of the destinies of the battalion for the summer encampment at least, the Commandant only half an hour earlier having summoned to the hotel and the presence of three or four "planks", (the local designation of members of the Board of Visitors), the missing first sergeant, and read to him the order appointing his adjutant, his first adjutant, by the way, handed him the papers, merely saying: "Form the battalion and publish the orders. There is your authority." and without a word, the recipient stood for a brief second at the salute, then faced about and marched off upon his new business.

Never before to their knowledge and never after was that most important order published in that most informal way, but it conveyed to the Corps a decision that six months later held it utterly subject to the cadet adjutant as the representative of the Commandant of Cadets. Had even their first captain as officer-of-the-day essayed to stop the parade held at the order of their adjutant, or to interfere in any matter connected with the ceremony ordered by the Adjutant, the answer, as pointed out by the investigating officers, might have been that which Hildt had given to Hallonquist at Santa Rosa. Cadet Captain Davis was held by the Commanding Officer to be entirely blameless, but Cadet Captain Davis would never so hold himself. To the very last he refused to sign the certificate of the Officer-of-the-day.

And in that one episode the character of the man whom the Corps already honored and swore by, stood manifest to the little world of West Point.

"When I want your resignation, gentlemen," rumbled in his basso profundo, Commandant Black, to the Cadet captains and lieutenant who had taken active part in that long-discussed drumming out, "you will hear it in the order reducing you to the ranks." And so it happened as a result of that tragedy of their first class year, the Adjutant alone was brought to trial in his official capacity—the other participants were arraigned simply as "Cadets". To a man they pleaded guilty; to a man they were commended to the clemency of the reviewing authority, the Adjutant coming in for a "bouquet" that was full compensation for the two months in which he vegetated in arrest. While his associates were held on probation to the day of their graduation, the Adjutant, released from arrest, served out his remaining cadet days, by order of Mr. Secretary Stanton, a private in the ranks of Davis' company, practically the only one even mildly punished.

Graduated and commissioned in the Engineers, Davis set forth upon a career that became memorable. It is not the purpose of this memoir to attempt an analysis of his professional worth and his long years of varied yet everywhere most valuable service. In considerable detail these are recorded in Cullum's Biographical Register, and especially in commendatory letters and records of the Chief of Engineers.

It so happened that in the long years that followed upon graduation, though Davis was on incessant Engineer duty, and I had started, at least, in the line, we who had been tentmates in plebe camp, roommates throughout the plebe year, and prospective roommates thereafter, found the combination destroyed by the fact that we were "made" first sergeants of "A" and "B" Company respectively. However, for many a long year we remained in touch. Detailed for duty as instructors at the Academy, we shared a "suite" in the angle of cadet barracks. Again were we together in New Orleans, he at the Engineer office, I at Department Headquarters; again for long years at Milwaukee, he in charge of river and harbor improvements, I engrossed in the training of the National Guard. Again at San Francisco, he busily engaged with the defenses and the improvement of that glorious harbor, I serving with the volunteers; this at the outbreak of the war with Spain. Later still we were much together during the years of his supervision at the Sault de Sainte Marie, of the new lock which was to bear his name, whether officially bestowed or simply conferred by the devoted array of assistants who swore by him for the reason that, if not actually author of its being, more than any other man was Davis the prop of its existences. Indeed it finally became the pride of his life.

Davis never had a job he did not seem at least to love, so much of his heart and soul went into everything to which he turned his attention. Even at the delta of the Mississippi, of all places on earth in which to spend one's days, dwelling on a dredge boat, sweltering week after week on broiling, unshadowed decks, with no companions but the "ship's company", no recreation but his books—Davis never touched a card—looking out day after day over that changeless vista of swollen, turbid, tawny waters, framed by waving marsh grass; no other view; no other vegetation, there I found him, cheery and content, not too confident of the merits of the method upon which his seniors seemed to have pinned their faith—improving the navigation of South West Pass and other mud-lined mouths of the roiling river by digging out the bottom and distributing it over the Gulf—lending all the same his uttermost energies to the task. Once a month, perhaps, he would board some incoming steamer, spend two or three days in conference in the office in New Orleans, then we could get together and compare notes, as it were, on the questions of the day, for Louisiana had two legislatures along in 1873, and one could hardly say just how many Governors. Two military forces were busied in the effort to keep the peace, good old General Emory commanding those of the Federal Government, and James Longstreet, Lee's great right arm a decade earlier, now a superb figure in the full uniform of a modern major general, U.S. Army heading those of the sovereign state of Louisiana as then organized, with the writer of this chronicle forever trotting to and fro between these old-time friends and comrades, burdened with messages too confidential in character to be put in writing. It was a time of confusion worse confounded, so far as political conditions were concerned, and said Davis, "My job may be dreary, but heaven save me from such as yours".

It might be difficult, on his authority, to say which one of several great assignments Davis liked the most. Judging from the enthusiastic praise and support accorded him by the monarchs of navigation on the Great Lakes, it was when Detroit had become his station and the canals of the Sault, the flats of the St. Clair and the safe conduct of the broad and beautiful stream before him yielded such lavish tokens of admiration and esteem. Henry B. Ledyard of the Class of '65, then and long years before and after, the head of the Michigan Central Railway, absorbed in the tunnel, which was to treble the efficiency of the Central System, declared that whereas there had always been questions of the utmost delicacy and importance between the magnates of the railways and the Engineer guardians of the boundary river—always vexing problems and oftentimes costly delays, everything, said he, seemed to move on "greased wheels" while Davis was in control. Davis saw in obstacles to commerce only barriers to be removed. Davis never obstructed. Davis never delayed. Davis was always looking up some way of being a help to us, said he, and never a hindrance. So, too, said the officials and members of the powerful Lake Carriers Association, and what more did they not say at the final banquet in his honor, when at last the demands of the service led to orders elsewhere?

So, too, in San Francisco, where the harbor lines and limits had ever been subjects of more or less controversy, Davis may well have felt a preference for his fortification plans, but they never drew him from the care and study and close attention demanded by the claims of the ship owners and merchants of that metropolis. At the Bohemian Club he had his niche of fame, and among those princes of hospitality and humor, Davis stood, as they said, "top notch"; Davis's incisive wit and bubbling merriment ever brought a circle about his favorite lounging chair, and Davis's latest story had a circulation the Hearst papers might have looked upon with envy.

Davis, moreover could tell or hear a story at his own expense with better grace than any man I ever knew, and Lockwood's bon mot at Detroit—Lockwood being his classmate, comrade Engineer, and only rival in the realms of wit and repartee—brought down the house when told in Bohemia, and travelled fast and far. There had been a time when Davis, always stout, found himself becoming rotund, and complained to Lockwood of the ill success of his latest tailor.

"Have you ever tried Spalding?" invitingly inquired Lockwood.

"Spalding! I thought baseball uniforms, and goods, the only tailoring he did," replied Davis, biting at once, when experience should have bidden him beware.

"That's it," said Lockwood; "he covers baseballs—he ought to be able to fit you."

One more reference to the regard in which he was held among the people wheresoever he might be stationed. In Milwaukee there had been many an officer of Engineers who won the esteem and regard of prominent citizens by the score—men who once in a long while came together in the tender of a parting dinner. We had in numbers the chiefs and leaders of the shipping interests, the great coal, and fuel, and lumber companies,—men of every prominent enterprise, all dependant upon the maintenance of Milwaukee's harbor, with its most intricate and difficult inner shore line, thanks to three artificially navigable streams. But Society's farewell dinner to "Major" Davis, as he was then universally known, one of the most beautiful ever tendered at the Milwaukee Club, was graced by the presence of almost every woman prominent in society. They themselves had demanded the privilege.

And it is by the title of "major" that he seems to have been best and longest known along the shore line of "The Lakes", and richly he repaid their preference, throwing into this service to the last days of his most fruitful life, the very best that was in him; to the end glorying in the unvexed commerce of the waters through the medium of those magnificent gateways at the "Soo"; to the end he fought with all his might the further progress of the gash that bore away to the Mississippi the volume of water without which the harbors of seven of the great states of the northwest might as well be sucked dry—their docks and wharves denied to all but fourth class shipping, through the medium of that well-named instrument of commercial rapacity—the Chicago Drainage Canal.

One more episode in his professional career—the much applauded, yet most unusual tender of the star of a brigadier general in the line of the Army, after almost a lifetime in the Engineers. Grade by grade he had risen as a matter of routine, until, as senior of the graduates of '66 still living, he nevertheless saw between him and possibility of further advancement many a possible candidate. He had seen year after year, raised to the rank of general officer, gallant soldiers of the fighting force whose better fortune he could seldom begrudge, even though the years of their service fell far short in some instances of his. After all, was there nothing in all he had so admirably accomplished of value to the nation—equal to anything that had been done in the Indian, the Cuban or the Philippine campaigns?

If "Peace hath her victories no less than those of War", were there not victories he had won against the warring tides—the fierce assailants of the massive aids to navigation he had so well builded?—builded, as it turned out, even better than he knew.

"Kaiser" Mackenzie, brainy as he ever was beloved, was then our Chief of Engineers, and "Kaiser" believed in all round justice. Without a word to Davis of which I ever heard, Mackenzie took that sheaf of records setting forth the long catalogue of his veteran colonel's services, and planked it down upon the desk of his sincere friend and admirer, the Secretary of War, and in another week there came the announcement of promotion, at which no fellow graduate was ever heard to cavil. On the other hand a stack of telegrams, higher even than his records, piled upon the desk of the new brigadier, and in the words of a rousing campaign song made famous by Billy Homer of the Class of '70—another of the coterie of first captains—and paraphrased for the occasion by one of the meekest of his chorus:—

"Down came the Castles and up went the Stars"—the stars won and worn by each of that little triumvirate—first captain, adjutant, and quartermaster of the graduating class, whom we earlier mentioned as being hammered out of the resounding cavern of the mess hall, that gorgeous June day afar back in 1866.

"Soldiers Three" it had pleased the Master to accord to them long life, much of it, especially toward the last, made joyous by frequent association. The last month on earth of him who was first to go was spent with Davis at their favorite haunt on the Jersey seashore, and hardly had he been lowered to his honored grave than the symptoms which our president had already noted, and had done his best to hide, became so threatening as to compel his seeking the best professional attention, and there devolved upon his devoted sisters the duties of amanuensis.

Theirs had been so happy and united a household. Many years before they had occupied an attractive home in Plainfield, New Jersey, provided for the aging father and mother whose pride in their sons seemed to have begun in their very infancy. Advancing years and failing health had demanded of the father early withdrawal from business cares, and most gratefully had the elders lived what remained of their gentle lives under the roof of their boys' providing. Davis never married. Filial duty was a religion with him, and Honor thy father and thy mother came almost as a first commandment.

Fine old Connecticut stock were they,—Charles having been born in New Haven, Feb. 16, 1844,—the father, Charles S. A. Davis, being in direct descent from a Welch surgeon who landed in New York City in the year 1700, the mother, Mary Jeannette Downs, being the great grand daughter of John Downs, a resident of New Haven in 1634. They were gathered to their fathers at a ripe old age, and buried at Plainfield, where for a time their accomplished daughters continued to live. But Davis had better plans for them—years of foreign travel and study—seven or eight in all, and at various periods, while their ever indulgent brother was serving in the South or in the distant West. Not until after the retirement by due process of law, when Davis reached the age of 64, did they really settle down, and even then there soon came stern interruption, for, during the World War, to his great joy, he was recalled to active service and the charge of the defenses of San Francisco. Not until some time after the armistice was he finally relieved and returned to Plainfield and his sisters. Attractive as was the Plainfield home, they nonetheless seemed to long for the seashore, and a house even more attractive was chosen, and thither they removed their belongings. Atlantic City for a time seemed something like a modern Mecca to veterans of the Army and Navy. Hardly a week passed without the coming of old associates, and then long walks and talks with men whose friendship was half a century old, yet ever gaining in fervor. Even had there been lack of that companionship, life was still sweet to him, so deep and tender was his devotion to the sisters whose greatest joy was their home life with him, yet, when, as often happened, some one or more of the men who had been his chosen associates were registered among the huge caravanserais that broke the Jersey shoreline, almost before their luggage could follow to their rooms, General Davis was announced, and speedy transfer effected. No one of their number could ever forget the grace and cordiality of the welcome to that fireside, for the hospitality of the Davis household was of the "all the year round" character that savored of the Southland in the Colonial days, or the lavish welcome of the good old times of coach and pillion and saddle, long years "before the War".

And then, all too soon, the shadows came, and he who loved his books and who kept ever well abreast of national affairs through the medium of the best of the journals of the day, found his eyesight failing, and what was worse, a condition that demanded speedy consultation, as has been said, with the best of oculists; and then, if sight was not to be denied entirely, the stern appeal to the surgeon's knife. The last years of the long, honored and most useful life were destined to be spent almost in total darkness, and then indeed, it seemed as though there were no limit to sisterly sympathy or service. Compelled for a time to shorten even the hours of outdoor life and exercise on which so much depended, Davis found himself the victim of a growing and painful malady that, coupled with the gathering darkness, housed, —almost imprisoned him. Then came weeks and months of suffering that might have wrung complaint from men in the prime of life, but that could not bring a murmur from our soldier-scholar, and as the summer of 1925 came on, it became all too evident that he should be spared the pain of further operation, even then projected. Those already essayed had proved heavy strain upon the over-burdened heart. It was no longer the loss of eyesight he had to dread, for life itself was trembling in the balance.

On the morning of the last Friday in May, turning to the sister at the moment on duty, he said, "I wish to dictate a letter instead of having you write it," and as the object, he named the junior member of the trio so frequently referred to. But that letter was never written; something caused its postponement to Monday, and on Monday morning, peacefully, placidly, almost without pain or struggle he fell quietly asleep and the long and useful life was brought to a close.

Sixty years and more have rolled away since the June morning on which a little squad of plebes, burdened with blankets, buckets, coverlets, a pillow apiece and miscellaneous impedimenta, dumped their loads upon the dusty street of Company "A", faced its acting first sergeant and received his initial order:—"You two in there", said he, indicating the second tent on the south side and nearest the east, whereupon the two least in stature of the group transferred their loads to the wooden tent floor, then, straightening up, took a leisurely survey one of the other:—Yale and Columbia, Freshmen year behind them and the wide world ahead—the future First Captain and the Adjutant of the Corps of Cadets took mental stock of each other.

Nearly of an age, nearly of a height, nearly on a par, as far as educational advantages were concerned, they were otherwise about as unlike as two lads of seventeen well could be, yet the friendship born that fair morning outlived any other, for Davis was a man to tie to, and Plebe Camp had not come to its close before we found him, in "A" Company at least, our master spirit.

And as was our estimate that opening summer, so we found him to the very end. Firm, steadfast, unswerving, his was perhaps as strong a character as ever I knew, and yet, how much there was of geniality, of wit and fun. He had what has been termed "the fatal gift of mimicry"; he had an unerring eye for foibles, faults and weaknesses, and men possessed of them steered clear of Davis and little loved him, just as those who would have dawdled through their duties on parade, on guard or drill—marring, possibly, the military front of Company "A"—were sure of being called to order on the spot and likely to figure in the delinquency book thereafter. Davis played no favorites. "Tros, Tyriusve mihi" might well have been his motto, said the Quartermaster, and those were days when second classmen, wearing sergeants' chevrons had oftentimes to order about their elders by a year—men to whom within that very month, perhaps,—graduated, commissioned and clothed with new authority,—they could accost only at attention and the salute. There were first sergeants who were sometimes mindful of this fact, just as there were a few,—a very few—first classmen, to remind them, but the name of Davis was never heard in that connection.

Firm, fearless, unswerving in cadet days as throughout every month and year of his entire career, no matter what the influence—and no man ever dared approach him with temptation,—he hewed straight to the line, and the very men who winced at times under his inflexible rule, learned all the more to look up to him in respect and honor unspeakable. Cadet or Colonel, it never waned or weakened, and so as on that graduation day it sent him forth acclaimed above all others, so it clung to him throughout the long years of his professional life, and now when one speaks or thinks of the Class of '66, the name that inevitably flashes foremost on the scroll as typical of that class and time, as easily its representative and leader, is that of him whom, afar back in '62 the Academic Adjutant prophetically introduced as "Old Alphabet" Davis.

WILLIAM ALLEN PHILLIPS

No. 3317. Class of 1889.

Died, June 4, 1925, at Bethesda, Md., aged 59 years.

A brilliant and useful life came to an end on the night of June 4, 1925.

Colonel William Allen Phillips, class of 1889, looked for the last time from the balcony door of his sick room over the beautiful grounds of his Edgemoor home and at last gave up the long fight for health and life that he had been making hopefully and patiently for nearly four years.

Colonel Phillip's death added one more to the long list of World War casualties. During the war he was in command of Aberdeen Proving Grounds where enormous quantities of explosives, much of them salvaged, were stored and necessarily handled by inexperienced personnel.

The long days of hard work and the strain due to his endless responsibilities and his constant vigilance in combatting the always imminent danger of fatal explosions, finally broke down Phillip's robust body and caused his untimely end.

Though his body was sadly broken, his spirit always remained unconquered. Even while he saw his reserves of physical strength dissipated in a succession of heart attacks, his indomitable will and flaming spirit fought back the cohorts of the Grim Reaper and would not accept defeat until his last reserves were in.

"Wop" Phillips at West Point was one of the steady kind, reliable, dependable, but not conspicuous. His class standing was never high enough to warrant the belief or hope that he would "make the Engineers", although even in those early days, his scientific and mechanical tastes were in evidence.

Phillips, from young boyhood, always had an inventive mind and a bent towards engineering, but his development at West Point was too slow to permit his selection for the Corps for which his subsequent service demonstrated he would have been so well fitted.

Unlike many of the more brilliant scholars of his alma mater, "Wop" Phillips kept on developing after he left West Point and was able to use, in a practical way twenty years after leaving the Academy, much of the mathematics that proved a stumbling block to him as a cadet.

Phillips had active field service in the Infantry against the Cheyenne Indians in 1890 and the Sioux in 1890-1891, in Cuba during the Spanish-American War and in the Philippines in 1900.

His most notable service in the Philippines was as Governor of the Province of Paragua.

He was a good Infantryman and a good executive, but it was as an inventor that he became known in and out of the Army.

"Wop" was perhaps the most decided inventive genius the Army has counted on its rolls in his generation. He contributed many inventions and mechanical improvements in ammunition, machinery and equipment to the Army during his details from the Infantry to the Ordnance Department.

During his service as a lieutenant he invented a vehicle speed indicator, which forms the basis of many of the automobile speed indicators now in use, a coaster brake for bicycles, now in almost universal use, a system of block signalling for railways and an electric switch for street railways.

While he was in charge of the small arms ammunition shops at Frankford Arsenal he improved, through his inventions, practically every feature of rifle ammunition-powder, cartridge case, bullet and method of packing.

At that time the service ammunition compared favorably with the special ammunition of high price manufactured by the private concerns.

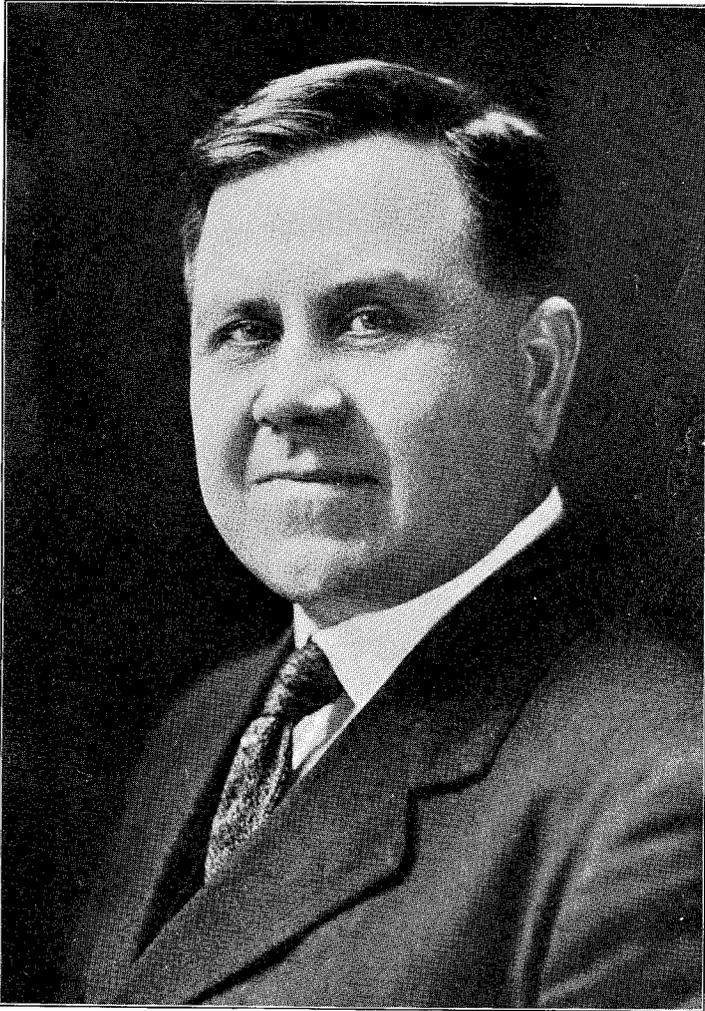

Phillips was a practical inventor. He worked out his mechanical inventions empirically. After he found that they would operate the way he believed they would, he made the mathematical computations that proved and explained them.

Phillips was of a cheerful and serene disposition. His principal interests were his family and his work. He loved his home and his country, for which he gave his genius and his life.

He lived so simply and unostentatiously that few people knew him well enough to appreciate him.

He has left a record that perhaps might not be called spectacular but is one of enviable accomplishment that reflects upon the Army and his alma mater the fullest measure of credit and that forms for his wife and daughter, who knew and loved him best, an imperishable source of pride.

LLOYD ENGLAND

No. 3682. Class of 1896.

Died, October 5, 1925, at Little Rock, Ark., aged 50 years.

The press of the country on October 5, 1925, carried the sad intelligence of the untimely death of General Lloyd England, '96. This sudden and unexpected announcement brought a pang of deep sorrow to every member of the Class of 1896, as well as to all men who were in the Academy with that class, for what graduate who served at West Point between 1892 and 1896 can look back at his cadet days without the most happy recollections of "Merrie" England. Few men in the army of graduates who have passed to the Great Beyond have left behind them such pleasant personal memories as those associated with the remembrance of Lloyd England.

Lloyd England was born in Lonoke, Arkansas, April 14, 1875, the son of J. E. England and Alice Morgan England. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Little Rock and entered the Academy June 15, 1892. Upon graduation he was assigned to the 3rd Artillery and with that regiment sailed for Manila in 1898 where he was to achieve distinction as an officer in the Philippine Insurrection. The records show that he participated in the following engagements: La Loma, February 4-10, 1899; the advance on Caloocan, February 10, 1899; Malenta, Malolos, Guiguinto, Meycayan and Marilao, where he was wounded, March 27, 1899. He participated in the repulse of the insurgent attack at Paom Bom, April 13, 1899, and the engagements at San Mateo, December 17, 1899, and at Montalban on December 26, 1899. He saw active service in General Schwan's expedition south of Manila, January 1 to March 1, 1900, including fights at Muntinlupa, Rosario, Indang, Silang, Naic and Santo Tomas.

In recognition of his services he was promoted to be Captain, 11th U. S. Cavalry Volunteers. He was recommended by his commanding officer for Brevet 1st Lieutenant for conspicuous gallantry, coolness and skill in leading his command in action, February 5-10, 1899. Another commanding officer recommended him for Brevet 1st Lieutenant for gallantry, coolness and splendid fire control of Battery K, 3rd Field Artillery, which he commanded in the advance on and capture of the insurgent position of Caloocan and the passage of the Tullihan river.

Another commanding officer recommended him for a brevet for gallantry in action at the battle of Malolos, P. I., March 31, 1899. Another officer commended him for energy and ability in the advance and attack on Indang in January, 1900, and for Brevet Captain for charging with his troops and forcing a crossing against insurgents entrenched on opposite bank at San Mateo river, December 18, 1899.

It was not only on the field of battle as an Army officer that Lloyd England achieved distinction. Resigning from the Army in 1907 after gaining the grade of Captain in the Regular Establishment, he entered the real estate and banking business at Little Rock, Arkansas, with his father and brother. At the time of his death he was Vice-President of four prominent banking and investment companies in Arkansas. He gained a state wide recognition in banking circles in 1914 when he was appointed receiver for a State National Bank and so skillfully handled the affairs of that institution that every depositor was paid in full with interest. He was president of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce in 1923 and one of its directors at the time of his death. Although engrossed with business cares, he gave his military knowledge and experience to his native state and served as Adjutant General of Arkansas from 1913 to 1919. At the beginning of the World War he reorganized the state troops and inducted into service the largest National Guard organization that the state had ever had. He supervised the drafting of more than 65,000 Arkansas men under the selective service law. In addition to the other arduous and exacting duties devolving upon him during the World War, he found time to serve as Chairman of the National Council of Defense of his native state. On his death the Governor of Arkansas issued the following statement:

"In the death of General Lloyd England, the city, state and nation have lost a citizen whose value can not be estimated. The story of his life is an epitome of service, and his is a record that always will be a source of pride to his fellow citizens and an inspiration to the young men of the state".

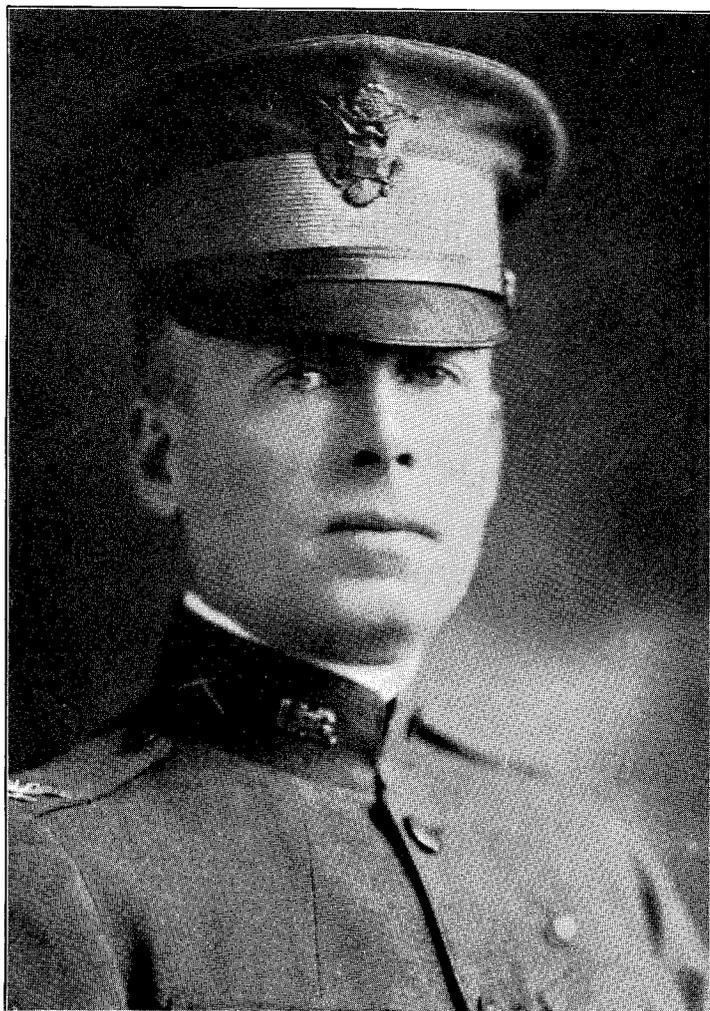

On the occasion of General England's funeral, the State of Arkansas gave evidence of their sense of loss and of the value the State placed on its son who had just passed on. Accordingly, by order of the Governor, all offices at the Capitol of Arkansas were closed and all State flags were flown at half mast.

The above is a brief condensed story of the achievements of a son of West Point. He achieved great success as a soldier, a financier, and as a civic leader. The people of his State held him in high regard because of his sound judgment and his faithful stewardship.

But the death of Lloyd England came as a great sorrow to others—to hundreds of graduates of West Point who will always tenderly look back at, and gain an inspiration from the memory of the genial personality and the lovable character of "Merrie" England.

COLONEL KARL DAENZER KLEMM

KARL DAENZER KLEMM

No. 4408. Class of 1905.

Died, November 15, 1925, at Kansas City, Missouri, aged 45 years.

Karl Daenzer Klemm, or "Dutch" as he was best known by his classmates and other friends at the Academy, was born in Saint Louis, Missouri, on December 5th, 1880. He was the son of Richard Klemm and Carrie Daenzer Klemm. His father, a civil engineer, was engaged in the construction of the great Eads Bridge over the Mississippi River, at St. Louis, from 1874 to 1879, and a few years prior to his death which occurred in 1896, served a four year term as a member of the St. Louis Park Commission.

Klemm graduated from Smith Academy, the preparatory department of Washington University, St. Louis, in 1898. He entered West Point June 19, 1900, and graduated with the Class of 1905. On graduation he was assigned as a second lieutenant to the 14th Cavalry and was stationed for a time in the Northwest. In November, 1905, he was transferred to the 4th Cavalry and served with that regiment in the Philippine Islands, at Fort Snelling Minnesota, and at Fort Bliss, Texas. He was engaged on military map work, in 1907, and in 1910 served as Aide-de-Camp to General Howe.

On September 30, 1911, Klemm resigned from the Army in order to follow a business career. For a time he was associated with the Commerce Trust Company of Kansas City, Missouri, but gave up this work in order to engage in railroad construction work in the state of Washington. Returning to Kansas City he again entered the business life of that city. By the time the United States entered the World War, he had reached a position of great prominence and responsibility, but he did not hesitate a moment in sacrificing his personal interests, and promptly tendered his services to his country. The first weeks of the war found him organizing the 2nd Missouri Field Artillery (later designated as the 129th Field Artillery) and on June 22, 1917, he was commissioned a colonel. His regiment having been assigned to the 35th Division, he trained it with that division at Camp Doniphan, on the Fort Sill Reservation, Oklahoma. He took his regiment to France with the division in the spring of 1918 and commanded it with distinction in all the operations in which his division was engaged, including the deep but sanguinary advance the division made when the great Meuse-Argonne offensive was launched late in September, 1918.

Returning to the United States in the spring of 1919, Klemm was honorably discharged at Camp Upton, N. Y., on April 8, and at once plunged back into the business career which he had temporarily abandoned, when his country called. His zeal, energy, and business ability soon placed him in the forefront of Kansas City's leading business men. In 1924, his biography appeared in "Kansas City and Its One Hundred Foremost Men". At that time, his responsibilities and interests included the holding of the following positions: President of the Kansas City, Kaw Valley, and Western Railway Company; President of the Missouri Railway Terminal Company; Vice-President of Electric Park Amusement Company (Kansas City); Vice-President of the Citizen's Light, Heat and Power Company, of Lawrence, Kansas; and chairman of the Executive Committee of the Kansas City Ice Company.

On November 15, 1925, the people of Kansas City, and Klemm's comrades and friends elsewhere, were shocked to learn that Klemm had shot and killed himself in Kansas City, Missouri. No motive whatever could be ascribed except despondency due to ill health aggravated by overwork and a crushing load of responsibility and worry. He had been under a physician's care for several months, but in spite of his failing health, he continued to carry an excessive load of work and responsibility. A host of friends and business associates mourned his death and sorrowfully followed his earthly remains to their final resting place.

It would be most difficult to describe, in an adequate manner, all of Klemm's many fine qualities. His sterling integrity, fairness and squareness, and his unfailing geniality endeared him to his classmates and won for him the respect and esteem of a host of friends. Though gentle, lovable, and good-natured, he possessed resolution and firmness. His ability was marked and his judgment sound. He had a bright mind and a keen sense of humor. Of all his many lovable and admirable traits, the two which perhaps stood out most brightly were his great geniality and his great fondness for and unswerving loyalty to his friends.

An indication of the esteem in which he was held by his business associates and the sorrow they felt in his death may be had from the following resolutions of the Board of Directors of one of the business concerns with which he was connected.

"The Board of Directors of the Kansas City Interurban Freight Terminal Company in annual meeting assembled, desire to place on record their profound sorrow and sense of loss in the death of Colonel Karl D. Klemm, who has been a member of this Board since its organization. Colonel Klemm was a man of such sterling worth; a man of poise and quiet dignity though always affable and courteous; a trustworthy man of unswerving integrity and unblemished character, of broad sympathies and wide interests; a strong, able, clean man; a cultured gentleman who won the respect and affection of all who knew him, and with whom it was a pleasure to be associated.

To Mrs. Klemm we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

Resolution adopted at a meeting of the Directors of the Kansas City Interurban Freight Terminal Company, in Kansas City, Missouri, January twelfth, 1926".

ROBERT P. WOODS, President,
E. S. BIGELOW, Secretary.

COLONEL THOMAS WILSON GRIFFITH

Notwithstanding the heavy demands which a very active business life made upon him, Klemm's interest in the Army, and in his friends therein, never lagged. He never ceased to have an absorbing interest in army people and army happenings, and while residing in Kansas City he was a frequent visitor to Fort Leavenworth. From 1921 to the time of his death, he was a Brigadier General in the Officers' Reserve Corps, commanding the 177th Field Artillery Brigade of the 102d Division. He took a prominent part in Reserve Corps activities in Kansas City.

On October 17, 1911, Klemm was married to Miss Gertrude Heim, daughter of Joseph J. Heim, a leading citizen and pioneer resident of Kansas City. His married life was one of great happiness. His wife survives him to mourn his loss and cherish the memory of a loving and devoted husband who played Life's game fairly and squarely and achieved a highly creditable record as a citizen and as a soldier.

His memory will be forever bright in the hearts of his devoted classmates and other comrades and friends.

In 1874 and 1875 he travelled round the world spending considerable time in Egypt and in China and other parts of the Orient. For a time he was a Lieut.-Colonel in the Egyptian Army. ## GEORGE FRANCIS CHASE

No. 2394. Class of 1871.

Died, Dec. 13, 1925, at Washington, D. C., aged 77 years.

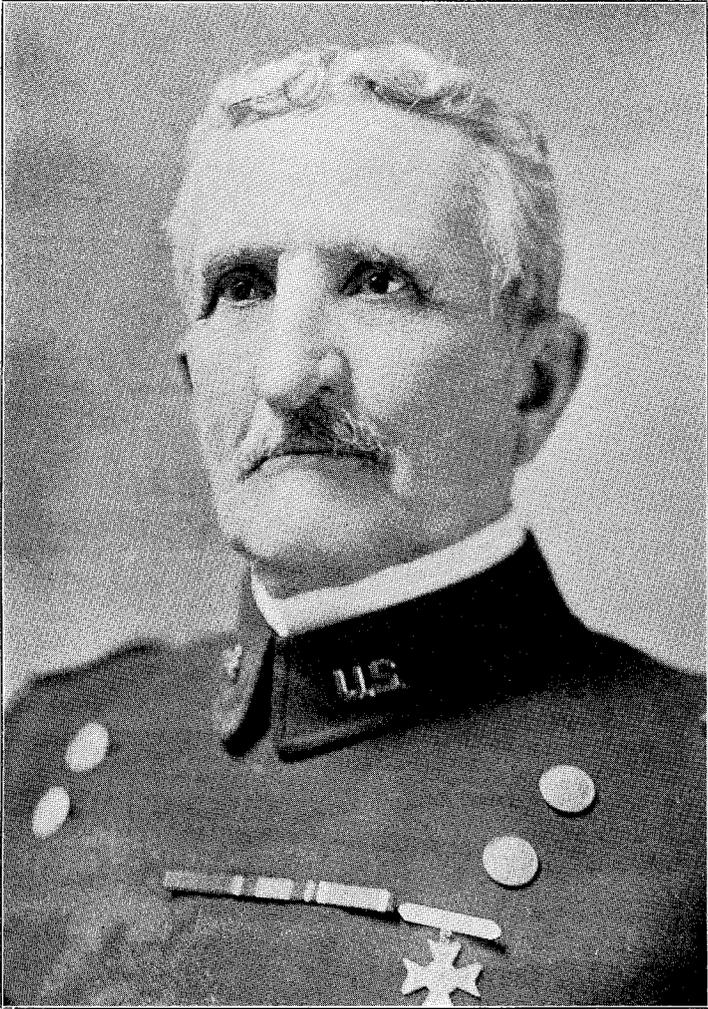

A gallant and beloved officer of the old army, General George Francis Chase, died at Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C., on December 13, 1925. His career was long, varied, and distinguished, notably during the Indian Wars, where service was hard and recognition slow in forthcoming, and with important commands during the Philippine Insurrection.

General Chase was born in Macomb, Illinois, July 29, 1848. Appointed to the U. S. Military Academy in 1867, he was graduated in the class of 1871 and assigned as Second Lieutenant to the 9th Infantry. He was transferred to the 3rd Cavalry in May the following year, promoted to First Lieutenant in 1879, Captain in 1887, Major in 1901, Lieut.-Colonel in 1903, Colonel in 1906, Brigadier General in 1912. He served in Wyoming and Nebraska, taking an active part in the Black Kettle expedition in 1873 and the Big Horn, and Yellowstone expeditions in 1876, engaging in the battle of Tongue River Heights the same year. He also participated in the battles of the Rosebud and Slim Buttes in 1878 and 1879, and subsequently against the Cheyennes, Utes, and Apaches. He was a student at the Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Va., from 1880 to 1882, and, always ready for hard service, in the latter year volunteered in campaigns against the Apaches, serving until 1885. From 1885 to 1897 he served at various forts and stations. In 1888 he married Nannie McClellan, daughter of Ely McClellan, Lieut.-Colonel Medical Corps, U. S. A., and cousin of General George B. McClellan.

In 1897 he was on special duty with the Assistant Secretary of War. The following year he was Provost Marshall at Camp Wickoff, from August 17 to October 2. From the latter part of 1898 until May 25, 1899, he was Provost Marshall General of the 2nd Army Corps.

He was ordered to the Philippine Islands with his regiment in 1899, and there commanded General Young's escort in his campaign from Arayat to Vigan. He commanded troops in the capture of San Fernando de Union, November 20, 1899, and participated in the battles of Taboatin Bridge, San Isidor, Manoeg, Avingay, and Tangaden Hill, receiving there two citations for gallantry in action entitling him to wear two silver citation stars on the service ribbon of his Philippine Campaign medal. He also was granted a service medal for services during the war with Spain. He returned to the United States in 1900 on recruiting duty.

In January, 1902 he joined the 7th Cavalry as Major, at Columbia Barracks, Cuba. In 1903 he was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel and ordered to command the 12th Cavalry, going again to the Philippine Islands. He remained in command of this regiment as Lieut-Colonel after its return to the United States, with station at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. until September, 1906. At that date he received promotion to a colonelcy and was assigned to command the 15th Cavalry, with headquarters in Cienfuegas, Cuba. In 1907 he was detailed in the Inspector General's Department and served as Inspector General, Department of the Lakes, Chicago, Ill., from May, 1907, to April 1910, and as Inspector General, Eastern Division, from the latter date until June, 1912. On May 16, 1912, he was appointed Brigadier General and assigned to duty at Washington, D. C., in the Inspector General's Office. He retired for age July 29, 1912.

An indication of his high standing among his superior officers, and the communities in which he served is given in the following excerpts:

The Legislative Assembly of Wyoming Territory passed the following resolution Nov. 10, 1877: "Resolved, By the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Wyoming, that the thanks of the Fifth Legislative Assembly be, and is hereby tendered to Lieut. George F. Chase, U. S. A., and the men under his command, for the gallant, prompt and efficient manner in which they have recently pursued, captured and delivered into the custody and charge of civil officers of Laramie County two of the notorious highwaymen who have for some time been a scourge and annoyance to travelers".

Extract from the report of the Major General Commanding the Army to the Secretary of War for the year 1893:

"While all officers in the field acquitted themselves creditably and performed their full duty, I desire to emphasize my appreciation of the valuable service rendered by Capt. George F. Chase, Third Cavalry, who in command of a squadron in the field, displayed tireless energy and great tact and discretion in carrying out his instructions. It is no disparagement to the valuable services of others to say that credit for a large share of the results attained is due this officer".

Brigadier General Frank Wheaton reported to Major General Nelson A. Miles under date of May 6, 1893:

"Capt. Chase has commanded my reserve squadron on the line south of the Mexican National Railroad during the active field operations of the past five months . . . . . No one has ridden so far, worked so hard, or rendered me more valuable service in my efforts to secure quiet on our Rio Grande frontier".

Major General George M. Randall, U. S. A., wrote to the Adjutant General under date of July 10, 1907:

"Colonel Chase is a high type of American Cavalryman; he has a fine command, excellent capacities, sound judgment, a high order of administrative ability and a first class field record".

General Charles King, Retired, of the class of 1866, writes that owing to the present state of his health, much as he would like to do so, he is unable to write the obituary "of that sterling soldier and steadfast comrade and friend—good old George Chase".

General J. L. Hines, Chief of Staff, wrote to Mrs. Chase, December 19, 1925:

"I wish to extend to you on behalf of the officers of the War Department, and for myself personally, our sincere sympathy in the death of your husband, Brigadier General George F. Chase, U. S. Army, retired. . . . General Chase's active service covered a period of forty-five years, during which time he received high praise from his superior officers for his able and conscientious service both as a Cavalry officer and an Inspector General. His death is greatly regretted by his old Army friends and associates".

While living here in Washington since his retirement, his many old friends, among whom I am proud to count myself one, learned to love him, more than ever, for his kindness, unselfishness, and fairness in his judgment of others, for his fine qualities of mind and heart, and for the patience with which he bore the years of suffering before his death.

General Chase was a member of the Military Order of the Carabao, the Order of Indian Wars of the United States, Veteran Army of the Philippines, and the Army and Navy Club in Washington.

Interment was at West Point, New York.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Nannie McClellan Chase, and by two daughters, Emily Tevis, and Nannie Chase, at present residing in Washington, and by two grandchildren, sons of the late Lieut. George McClellan Chase, First U. S. Cavalry.

General Hart was born in Winona, Minnesota, March 20, 1864, and was appointed to the United States Military Academy from Dakota on June 15, 1884, being graduated in the Class of 1888. He was assigned to the 20th Infantry as 2nd Lieutenant, June 11, 1888, and served with that regiment on frontier duty at Fort Assiniboine, Mont., until March 14, 1889, when he was transferred to the 4th Cavalry. He served with that regiment for the next eleven years at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; Boise Barracks, Idaho; Vancouver Barracks, Wash.; Fort Assiniboine, Mont.; Fort Grant, Ariz.; Huntsville, Ala.; and Havana, Cuba. He was promoted 1st Lieutenant, May 23, 1896, and served as Aide de Camp to Brig. General E. V. Sumner, U. S. Army, from June 10 to September 24, 1898.

He was appointed a Captain and Commissary of Subsistence on November 10, 1900, and served at the Depot, New York City; at Headquarters, Department of the Lakes, Chicago, Ill.; Assistant to Purchasing Commissary, Chicago, Ill.; at the Depot, Manila, P. I.; and as Assistant to the Chief Commissary, Philippine Division, until July 27,

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM HORACE HART

1903, when he was promoted Major. He was thereafter on duty as Assistant to the Commissary General at the War Department until 1909, a part of the time being principal assistant and on numerous occasions was called upon to act as Commissary General in the absence of his chief. During this tour of duty in Washington he was temporarily detached to serve as Chief Commissary, 1st Provisional Division, Army Maneuvers, at Manassas, Va., in 1904; to attend the Army Service Corps School, Aldershot, England, in 1908-1909; and to take a special course in supply inspection in the Department of Agriculture.

In 1909 he completed this important tour of duty at Washington and thereafter served as Depot Commissary, Honolulu, H. T.; Purchasing Commissary and Subsistence Superintendent, Army Transport Service, San Francisco, Calif.; and as Assistant to, and later, the Depot Quartermaster, San Francisco, until 1916. During his tour of duty in San Francisco he was, in addition to his regular duties, Purchasing Agent for the Panama Canal and Disbursing Officer for the Government Exhibit, Panama—Pacific International Exposition. He was promoted Lt. Colonel on March 6, 1913.

On completion of the tour of duty in San Francisco he served as Depot Quartermaster, Seattle, Wash., being promoted to Colonel on May 2, 1917. He then served as Department Quartermaster, Southern Department, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and as Depot Quartermaster, Jeffersonville, Ind., until the early spring of 1918, when he was ordered to France for duty with the A. E. F., serving from March 1918, to April, 1919, as Quartermaster, Base Section No. 1, St. Nazaire. On return from France he served successively in the office of the Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, Washington; as Zone Supply Officer, Boston; Assistant Zone Supply and Storage Officer, San Francisco; Depot Supply Officer, Norfolk, Va.; Depot Quartermaster, General Supply Depot; and General Superintendent, Army Transport Service, New York City. While serving in the latter capacity he was appointed Major General and Quartermaster General on August 28, 1922.

General Hart was not satisfied with a routine accomplishment of duty. He was hard-working and conscientious always, and interested in the welfare of the troops he served. It was due to his initiative that in the early days in the Philippines inter-island transports provided with cold storage facilities were inaugurated, making it possible to bring fresh meats, milk, butter, fruits, vegetables and ice to the troops serving in the Islands. Refrigerator cars installed at the same time on the Manila and Dagupan Railroad performed similar service for troops in Luzon. Those who were serving in the Philippines at the time this innovation was introduced still remember what a boon this service was to the troops carrying on the campaign of reconstruction in an undeveloped tropical country.

As Base Quartermaster, Base Section No. 1, St. Nazaire, France, he had charge of the great depots at St. Nazaire, Nantes and Montoir, the latter having 69 warehouses. The magnitude of this work is shown in the statement that this one depot contained 800,000,000 lbs. of stores at the time of the armistice; that as many as 256 cars of stores came in to the depot in a day, and 173 cars were shipped out in the same period; and that the employes,—commissioned, enlisted and civilian—numbered more than 4,000.

An established reputation for conscientious performance of duty and a keen appreciation of the importance of guarding the interests of the Government led to his assignment to the command of a number of important depots after the termination of the war, in order to bring about their reduction to a peacetime status. This duty involved the abandonment of offices, warehouses and large war-time activities, and the discharge of thousands of employees. It was an unpleasant and difficult duty and called for determination and strength of character. These he possessed to a high degree and the faithful manner in which he carried out the policy of retrenchment established by the War Department was recognized by the Secretary of War in the following letter:

“The Chief of Staff has brought to my attention a memorandum from the Quartermaster General of the Army, which states that you were assigned to duty as Quartermaster Supply Officer at the General Intermediate Depot, New York, on August 7, 1920, with instructions to make immediate and drastic reductions in overhead expenses and activities at that depot, and which relates in detail your success in carrying out these instructions. Your successful efforts in actual accomplishments and in formulating plans for further accomplishments during the time you were directly responsible for results evidence a clear appreciation by you of the necessity of operating on the most economical basis possible and an administrative and organizing ability deserving of commendation. In view of the valuable services rendered by you at this depot, I take this occasion of commending you for the zeal and administrative ability shown by you during this critical period”.

It was this work and his long record of faithful and loyal service that brought him to the attention of the War Department and led to his appointment as Quartermaster General. The Office of the Quartermaster General is the great business office of the War Department, and here again he was confronted with the problem of reorganization and reduction in personnel, but the work that interested him most keenly was concerned with the development of the scheme of industrial mobilization and with the reserve officers commissioned in the department. Into this work he put his enthusiasm and his mental and physical strength.

Although some definite progress had been made within the Quartermaster Corps as early as 1921, in the furtherance of those provisions of the National Defense Act which provide for the assurance of adequate procurement and mobilization of material and industries against war-time needs, General Hart, through his characteristic ability, foresight and thoroughness, brought this work to a high stage of development. Realizing the magnitude of this work and its vital influence upon the entire scheme of national defense, he gave it his enthusiastic support. He instituted effective measures for ascertaining the sources from which these supplies might be obtained and caused careful surveys to be made, supplying in detail the information essential to efficient procurement and distribution, and he had the satisfaction of knowing before his death that approximately 80 percent of this important work had been completed.

Organically, the Quartermaster Corps is composed of a number of services, each of which is a large supply agency in itself. The Supply, Transportation, Construction and Remount Services are the principal components possessing special significance in the operation of supply. Each service has a distinct field of activity in the fulfillment of specific, technical needs. The details of these combined operations are too numerous and varied to be listed here. A few of the more important ones requiring the decision and direction of the chief of the corps are listed in order to indicate the great scope of his work: The expansion and establishment of large depots and other agencies for the procurement, storage and distribution of food, clothing and equipment in all of the large supply centers of the country; the thorough survey of the nation's automotive industry, factory facilities, scientific methods of accelerating production, plans for the procurement of thousands of motor vehicle of various types, parts and accessories, and the ultimate delivery of all these products at the proper time to the centers at which they may be required by the troops who are to use them; the formation of plans for the many construction projects throughout the land that must be undertaken simultaneously upon the outbreak of an emergency for the housing of troops and supplies; the location of animal depots and the development of methods for the purchase, training and issue of these animals to the military forces; plans and methods for meeting the vast needs of the army, for transportation of troops and supplies; the requirement and allocation of capable and specialized personnel for operating the various supply agencies, for the technical handling of motor and transportation operations, the animal and remount activities and the large corps of technical personnel to be employed in the many construction projects. These are only a few of the major details that required the consideration and competent decisive action of the Quartermaster General.

In order that he might control and energize the training of the large number of reserve officers commissioned in the corps, General Hart caused what he called "Winter Plattsburgs" to be organized in the more important business and industrial centers, where efficient instruction and supervision were attainable. In these centers a course of training designed to familiarize reserve officers and interested civilians with their duties in time of war and with the problems of industrial mobilization was conducted during the winter months. He not only visited these centers of instruction and learned at first hand of the character of the work being done, but he kept in close touch with his reserve personnel through a series of semi-monthly letters which he prepared himself, and caused to be distributed to every reserve officer. This display of personal interest on his part insured the success not only of his scheme of reserve training but built up a keen interest on the part of business and industrial leaders of the country. At no time during the history of our country have the problems of national defense connected with commerce and industry been so thoroughly understood and appreciated as at the present time and this is due to a great extent to the influence General Hart exerted through the Winter Plattsburgs and his series of personal letters. It was the intimate human touch he put into his efforts that brought success.

To his classmates and intimate friends he was known as "Billy" Hart. He lived a life above reproach. He never married, choosing rather to remain single to guard and care for his only sister, also unmarried, until her death. He was generous to a fault, conscientious and sincere. To his superiors he was loyal always and to his duty he devoted the combined strength of his mind and body. He was a strict disciplinarian but was kind and considerate; a hard worker himself, he demanded much of those under him. He was charitable without ostentation; always ready to lend a helping hand to those in need of assistance and never forgot a kindness to himself. He loved children and young people and everywhere they flocked to him, attracted by his kindly, genial manner, hailing him as "Uncle Billy".

General Hart was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, with the following citation:

"William H. Hart, Colonel, United States Army. For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. While serving as quartermaster, Base Section No. 1, by his thorough knowledge of methods and standards of supplying troops, his resourcefulness, and comprehensive study of the innumerable details of the largest and most important supply bases in France, he executed the important duties with which he was intrusted in a highly satisfactory and especially efficient manner".

He was decorated with the Legion of Honor by the French Government, in recognition of his services to the Allied Cause.

General Hart was a member of the American Remount Association, the Army and Navy Club, the Press Club (of Washington), and the New York Athletic Club.

aged 36 years.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEATH

1. With deep regret the Regimental Commander announces the death this morning of Major Henry Harold Dabney, 15th Infantry, at the station of his regiment in this city. Funeral services will be held in the Chapel at 12:00 o'clock on Thursday morning, January 7, 1926.

2. Major Dabney died in the midst of a career of great promise. He graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1915 and has since served with honor and distinction as an Infantry officer of the Regular Army. During the Civil War in North China in 1924, he commanded the detached post of this command at Tongshan, and displayed commendable force, courage and good judgment in the critical period of the fighting in that vicinity. An officer of high standards and ideals, his death is a sad loss to his regiment and to his friends and brother officers.

G. C. MARSHALL, JR.

Lieutenant Colonel, 15th Infantry,
Commanding.

Harold Dabney was born in Livingston, Montana, August 21, 1889 and was appointed a Cadet from Oregon to the U. S. Military Academy on March 1, 1910 and graduated as a Second Lieutenant on June 15, 1915. He was stationed with the 14th Infantry at Fort George Wright, Washington, from September 12, 1915 to May 5, 1916 and at Douglas, Arizona, from May 9, 1916 to September 10, 1916. On July 1, 1916 he was promoted to First Lieutenant and served at Yuma, Arizona, until May 9, 1917. On May 12, 1917 he was transferred to the 44th Infantry at Vancouver Barracks, Washington, and was promoted to Captain on May 15, 1917. He commanded the Machine Gun Co., of the 44th Infantry from June 15, 1917 to November 19, 1917. He was promoted to Major on July 30, 1918 and transferred to the 76th Infantry on August 6, of the same year. He organized and commanded the 76th Infantry from August 6 to September 24, 1918, when he assumed command of one of the battalions of that regiment. On March 1, 1919 he was placed on recruiting service at San Francisco, Calif., and was later made Recruiting Officer of the 8th Corps Area which position he held at the time of his transfer to the 15th Infantry.

Dabney arrived in China as a Captain in July 1923. He was assigned to the command of "K" Company of the 15th Infantry, stationed at American Barracks in Tientsin. In June 1924 his company was ordered to Tongshan, a one company post whose function is to guard the important railway shops at that point.

During the Chinese Civil War which broke out in the Fall of 1924, Tongshan was the scene of considerable fighting between the contending factions. The native city was looted and great fear was felt for the lives of the foreign residents which had assembled in the American Compound for protection. For several days the situation was critical and called for the most delicate handling on the part of the American Commander. To fulfill his official mission and protect the foreign population without bringing on a clash with the Chinese soldiers constituted a task which called for a display of high diplomatic and military talent. Dabney met the requirements of the situation in a manner which won him well deserved praise from his military superiors and from the influential foreign and native residents of the war ridden district which was his charge. Not only were no lives lost but damage to the property of the foreign residents was prevented and the destruction and disorder incident to the occupation of the city by an undisciplined soldiery was minimized.

"K" Company completed its six months tour of duty at Tongshan in December 1924 and returned to Tientsin. Dabney continued in command until his promotion to Major in September, 1925. As a company commander he possessed to a marked degree the affection of his men and the respect of his superiors. He was unsparing of his efforts to provide for the welfare and comfort of those under his command, to raise his organization to a high state of efficiency and to have it excel in every competitive activity. Under his leadership "K" Company had a reputation for athletic prowess and general military efficiency which was second to none in the regiment.

The Chinese Civil War of 1925 culminated in a battle fought in the outskirts of Tientsin in December. During the latter stages of this engagement the situation was, at times, critical and Dabney, although suffering from an attack of influenza kept his name off sick report and took his turn at whatever duty came his way. By December 26th the crisis was over and on the 28th Dabney was taken to the hospital with a well developed case of pneumonia. His condition grew steadily worse and at 5:10 on the morning of January 4, he died. Dabney is survived by his wife, Margaret Wilson Dabney, whom he married in July, 1916, and by his daughter Virginia Ann. Both were with him in China when the end came.

* * * * *

On Monday morning, the flag flying from half staff from the water tower announced to the American garrison that Harold Dabney's fight for life had been without avail. Not an officer or man of the American Forces in China but had more than a passing interest in the deadly struggle behind closed doors, but, for those of us who knew him best, each hour of those last few days was an agony of suspense. "How is Dabney" were words of greeting when the seriousness of his illness became known and the ebb and flow of the battle could be read in the eyes, if not in the words of the stream of anxious inquirers which issued from the doors of the hospital where he lay.

Saturday was a day of encouragement for, in the afternoon, the course of his illness seemed to take a turn for the better. Then came night and the ground that had been gained was relinquished and more with it. Sunday was a day of gloom, for then we knew it was touch and go with him and Death and, with the steady drain on his life sustaining reserves, the odds were with the enemy. Only those who knew his quiet courage and unconquerable spirit dared hope for the best. Eagerly we seized upon the slight encouragement that "He still had a fighting chance. Harold Dabney never needed more than that and, by God—"

But the battle was unequal from the start. The old vitality that had carried him through another crisis two years before had been sapped by the disease that he had conquered, and Death struck a second time before he was ready. Courage and the will to live never flagged but their old physical allies were unequal to the occasion. All through the long night they held out but before the morning broke they were spent and the gallant spirit of Harold Dabney set forth on the Great Adventure.

Harold Dabney's death came as a direct result of his devotion to duty. During that critical week preceeding Christmas, when the fighting around Tientsin carried the possibility of grave consequences for the Allied Garrisons, he was ill and should have been on sick report. But it was not his way even to seem to shirk. He came daily to the Compound and took his tour of duty as it fell to his lot. Christmas day he had a fever when he went out to respond to the "Alert Formation" and that same afternoon he went at the head of a mounted patrol to follow the movement of the Chinese division which was passing the right of our defense line. He returned chilled and sick and this exposure, while in a weakened condition, brought on the fatal illness. So direct is the connection that we might well write "Killed in action" at the close of his enviable record as a soldier.

Harold Dabney possessed to a high degree the qualities which make for a successful military career. Loyalty to those above him, unselfish devotion to those under him, firmness, justice, courage, vision—all of these he had and more. His was a level head and a resolute heart and always he played the game. Quiet and capable, there was nothing of the spotlight seeker, nothing of the blatant self advertiser about Harold Dabney. He let his work, well done, speak for him, and frequently, as at Tongshan in 1924, it spoke eloquently.

The passing of Harold Dabney is a genuine loss to the service that he loved and gave his life for, but it is not so much of that service that we think in this hour. The ranks close in, the gap is filled, and the service goes forward into the years that lie ahead, unmindful of the individual who has ceased to be a part of it. But we who stood shoulder to shoulder with him cannot look upon his death as a mere incident in the great campaign of life. We who were his friends—and Harold Dabney had many—feel a deep sense of personal loss which casts its dark shadow at the end of a trail of happy memories. The same qualities which made him so useful to the service, endeared him to us who were fortunate in our claim to his friendship. It is in our hearts rather than in the cold type of his fine military record that is to be found the truest estimate of the man and the soldier.

He scarce had need to doff his pride, or slough the dross of earth
 E'en as he trod that day to God, so walked he from his birth,
 In simpleness and gentleness and honor and clean mirth.
 So cup to lip in fellowship they gave him welcome high
 And made him place at the banquet board—the Strong Men ranged thereby,
 Who had done his work and held his peace and had no fear to die.

FORREST HARDING.

OSCAR ARDEN RUSSELL

No. 4424. Class of 1905.

Died at Imola, California, January 6, 1926, aged 43 years.

One sunshiny morning in the latter part of May, 1902, a telegram was delivered to Russell in one of the large corner rooms of the angle of "D" Company Barracks. Russell read the message and handed the yellow slip to me: "Ernest died of cholera yesterday. Father". "Ernest" was Captain Charles Ernest Russell. Class of 1896, U. S. M. A., Oscar's oldest brother, stricken on duty in the Philippines. We, the three other plebes who roomed with Russell, tried in the awkward embarrassed way of boys to show our sympathy for him. He walked to the window, looked out on the plain for a moment, then returned to the table, opened his French grammar and began preparing the afternoon lesson. We knew his feeling for his brother and knew his sorrow must be great so we marveled at his manner. He was never the man for a pose, and it was not conscious self-control which kept him calm. Rather did it seem a kind of passivity—almost Oriental.

Russell's military and civilian career was honorable though not distinguished. His was a retiring nature, too modest for very practical success, sterling though his qualities were. He was reserved. He was gentle. He was considerate. Though few knew it he was highly sensitive. He had probably no enemies and but few positive friends, but those few knew the heart of gold beneath the modest breast and were grappled to his soul "with hoops of steel". From one he loved he would endure all things, forgive all things. Blameless, he suffered much. "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him". What seemed Oriental passivity was really Christian resignation. Always a Christian, even in the fellest "clutch of circumstance", latterly he felt strongly called to the ministry and at the time of his death he was a student at the Berkeley Divinity School. Russell is survived by two fine boys aged 15 and 13. His father, L. B. Russell, aged 76, Land Title Lawyer, and his mother, born Alice Beeman, live at Comanche, Texas. Here follows his military record.

JOHN GEORGE QUEKEMEYER

No. 4493. Class of 1906.

Born, August 31, 1884.

Died, February 28, 1926.

At West Point, New York, on February 28, 1926, just as dawn was breaking and beginning to shed its light on the bleak hills of the Highlands, John George Quekemeyer breathed his last and passed on to the great unknown. In the prime and vigor of young manhood, on the eve of undertaking a new duty that thrilled and inspired him, he finished his military career where he began it, in the bosom of his beloved Alma Mater.

George had been selected as the new Commandant of Cadets and had come to West Point on Saturday, the 20th, to confer with the new Superintendent, General Stewart, regarding the duties that he was so eager to assume, and to make preparation for his new activities. He had spent the preceding six months with General Pershing in Arica. He arrived in the United States in the pink of condition, but the sudden change from South American summer to North American winter was not conducive to his continued good health and he was somewhat disturbed by a cold before he left Washington to come to West Point. I saw him enjoying the basketball game on Saturday afternoon and I thought how healthy and robust he looked. He seemed well on Sunday, and on Monday evening I had a long talk with him. He was full of West Point, interested in all the details of his new job, overjoyed at the thought of coming back, full of enthusiasm for what he could do to make things better; and a little perplexed over the social obligations that belonged to the position of Commandant. He was determined to do everything required to fulfill the whole of his new job and to be a Commandant who would do credit in every way to the Military Academy.

He expected to return to Washington on Tuesday morning. Instead he was taken to the Cadet Hospital. Pneumonia in both lungs had developed, he was in a very critical condition and from this minute the medical officers, who were doing everything known to science to save him, knew he was fighting a battle with death. They were very doubtful of his recovery; he could not seem to improve. Tuesday night, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, showed no change. We anxiously watched his progress and hoped against hope that the crisis would be passed favorably. But it was not to be. Early Sunday morning Quek passed on. The whole post was sorrowed by his death. The flag on Trophy Point sadly hung at half-staff, the chapel service seemed to lack its usual "joyfulness in worship". The chaplain in his sermon that morning paid a glowing tribute to this stalwart officer and gentleman who so unexpectedly and so prematurely had been taken from us—for we at West Point were the ones who had looked forward to happy association with him in the days to come.

Quek was born in Yazoo City, Mississippi, on August 31, 1884, and we well remember the so often repeated sound-off of his plebe days, "Mr. Quekemeyer, suh, from Yazoo City on the Yazoo River in the Yazoo Valley in Yazoo County Mis'sippi, suh". His father kept a large commissary store from which all sorts of supplies were sold to the surrounding plantations. In summer, young Quekemeyer played about the store and rode his father's horses, and in winter, attended the public schools offered by the little town. He early showed a deep inclination toward military tactics and love for horses. When seventeen he graduated from the High School at Yazoo with high marks and with the class historian's prediction that George would some day "be a great general". How true this might have been had not Fate cut short his course! He received his appointment to West Point in the summer of 1902 but too late to report in June, so entered with the "Juliets". He stood the Plebe grind well, took his share of punishment in good grace, finished his Beast Barracks and Plebe Camp with much to his credit, and in September settled down in barracks with the rest of us to do his utmost to master "C. Smith". His life was a serious one though accompanied by a full measure of humor. He considered his study time as his duty time, and here began the development of such a high and almost sacred sense of duty that this is probably the outstanding characteristic of his life; it shows as his years advance at the Military Academy and as his service lengthens in the Army; it shows in his class standing and in his "makes" while a cadet; and in the positions of responsibility, often far beyond his years, for which he was chosen after graduation.

The 1906 Howitzer describes Quek as an earnest gleaner after the tenths, always ready with some sort of an answer to any kind of a question, and, "while we must admit that occasionally his answers are correct, it cannot be denied that 'Yazoo' often shows a tendency to change the author's version". Quek was quite a P. S.-er and, along with his polo, boned a Captaincy and is given credit for wearing out five dress coats in the service of his country!

On graduation he was assigned to the 5th Cavalry and served at Fort Duchesne, Utah, Whipple Barracks, Arizona, and at the 5th Cavalry cantonment on the Island of Oahu in Hawaii. He took the course at the Mounted Service School at Fort Riley, graduating in July, 1910; and then returned to Hawaii where he again served with his regiment until February 3, 1912. During the spring of this year he was returned to Fort Riley to prepare for the Olympic Games, and remained there until July, 1914, taking the second year course, acting as an instructor at the Mounted Service School, and on duty with "I" Troop of the 13th Cavalry. During the summer he was ordered abroad and in writing for his Decennial Book in 1916, he gives the following account of his experiences:

"I left New York on August 1, 1914, under detail to go to the French Riding School at Saumur, but before we got far from New York, everything exploded, and by the time I landed at Southampton, England, the whole of Europe was at war. I had a passport as an officer of the United States Army, and very foolishly (as I found out subsequently) supposed that this would take me any and everywhere. After a great deal of trouble, I succeeded in getting to Havre, and by leaving my trunks there with a French lieutenant at the depot (a man whom I had never seen before) I finally got on a troop-train and reached Paris, where I remained for two weeks.

"I was then sent with a Capt. Sevier, C. A. C., and "Frenchy" Hoyt, to Rome, as a Relief Commission, with $50,000 U. S. gold, to assist stranded Americans in getting back to the States. I was in Rome about three weeks, when I got a telegram from the Assistant Secretary of War telling me to proceed direct to the United States. I persuaded the Ambassador to telegraph him that my trunks had been left at Havre, and to request that I be allowed to return via Paris, but received word that I was either to proceed direct to the U. S. or direct to London, where I would report to the Military Attaché.

"At this particular time, the Germans were right up on top of Paris, so when I left Rome, as the Germans were then retreating, I took the bit in my teeth, and went to Paris, where I waited for two days in order to personally see Mr. Breckenridge.

"He gave me the devil for not obeying instructions, but I put up the plea of my life, and finally got permission to stay in Paris about a week, during which time I got one trip out toward the front, and saw lots of interesting things, but no actual fighting.

"I was then ordered to London, and after a couple of days there, was sent to The Hague to help out with relief work at that place. Mike Ardery was there. I was there only about five days, when I was ordered to London again, in order to return to the United States with the other officers of the Relief Commission. For some unknown reason, a stroke of luck came my way, and I was left back at London as assistant to the Military Attaché there".

Quekemeyer returned to the United States in March of 1917 and was on duty at the War College and with the British Commission to the United States. He sailed for England about the first of June as a member of the Commission to investigate the organization and training of the Allied Armies. On July 14, 1917 he was appointed Liaison Officer and Chief of the American Mission at British Headquarters.

It was here that General Pershing found him and, on May 1, 1918, selected him as his personal Aide-de-Camp. This duty—so important, so difficult, so exacting, requiring so much tact, so much discernment—he fulfilled with such eminent satisfaction that, except for brief periods, he continued in this capacity until his death. And there was built up between General and Aide a feeling of mutual respect and admiration that is uncommon, and a sentiment of affection and friendship and comradeship that is rare. Quek continued as Aide after the General returned from France and after his retirement, and became of such invaluable help that he seemed indispensable. A southern newspaper, commenting on Quekemeyer's services to General Pershing, said, "As personal aide to General Pershing during the whole of his service abroad, Major Quekemeyer had to act as buffer between the commanding general and his associates in the allied armies and between Pershing and his subordinates in the A. E. F. In this post of difficulties almost past imagining, Major Quekemeyer not only retained the confidence of General Pershing, but also gained the affection of nearly every one whose wounded sensibilities he had to treat or whose bruised pride he had to salve. He acquired also the respect of all the G. H. Q. representatives of the allied powers. It is scarcely too much to say that he was the Weygand of the A. E. F. He was a foursquare man and a gentleman unafraid. If General Pershing is not to set down his memoirs, the death of Major Quekemeyer removes the man best qualified to write the general's biography".

When he came back from the War with his chest covered with medals and ribbons, we had no feeling of envy; his decorations, almost as numerous as those of the General himself, were won by his full and conscientious performance of duty—on the battlefield where he was wounded, in our Headquarters or the Headquarters of the Allies, at the railhead; wherever it was, we knew he had performed as "a foursquare man and gentleman unafraid". He received the Distinguished Service Medal for "exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. As chief of the American Mission at British General Headquarters, he administered the duties of the office with tact and ability, promoting cordial relations between members of the Allied Armies with whom he came in contact. As aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief, he has performed his important duties with marked distinction and sound judgment". He was awarded decorations by Foreign Governments as follows:

- Officer of the Order of the Crown, Italy
- Officer of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, Italy
- Officer of the Order of the Crown of Belgium
- Officer of the Legion of Honor, French
- Croix de Guerre with Silver Star, Division Citation

Distinguished Service Order, British
 Order, 3rd Class, of Prince Danilo I of Montenegro
 Order, 2nd Class, of La Solidaridad of Panama

Quekemeyer stands certainly as one of the outstanding young men of the War, and at the time of his death on the threshold of further successes and unusual advancement.

In 1923 he was released to attend the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth from which he graduated with distinguished honor in 1924, but was called back as an Aide when General Pershing was ordered to South America in November as head of the Special Mission to the Centennial of the Battle of Ayacucho, and later as head of the Plebiscitary Commission to Peru. On returning from South America in the spring of 1925, he was for a short period an instructor at the Command and General Staff School, but returned again to Peru, coming back to the United States during the hardest part of the 1926 winter.

Quek's appointment as Commandant of Cadets came while he was at Arica. The first intimation he had regarding his appointment was a cablegram to General Pershing asking if the General could spare Quekemeyer to take the job. The General's affirmative action pleased Quekemeyer, but what pleased him most was the fact that his selection had come from the Military Academy authorities and from the War Department, and without any thought of his connection with General Pershing.

Quekemeyer was never married. His mother, frail and delicate, lived in her old home in Yazoo City, Mississippi. He was her support and great comfort, and on the death of her husband in 1914 George, the big brother of the family, actually became the father also. Just a few days before his death he wrote this kind, thoughtful, yet appealing letter to his brother:

HEADQUARTERS
 WASHINGTON

February 18, 1926.

Dear Buddy:

Your nice letter of the 17th instant has just been received and I was delighted to hear from you. Many thanks for your congratulations upon my appointment as Commandant of Cadets at West Point. I plan to run up to West Point to look the place over in the next day or two; then I shall come back to Washington for a day or two and then go to the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Georgia, for two or three weeks. After that I shall return to Washington to get my horses and household things and will then proceed to West Point, arriving there around the first of April. I am sorry that I will not have the opportunity of paying you all a visit for I should like very much to do so.

The latest news from home was that Mama was better, and I hope that she will be entirely well soon. I am glad to know that you have written her because from all accounts you have been very negligent about doing this. I certainly think you should make a point of writing to Mama at least once a week. It is all right to be busy, but you should never be so busy that you can't write to your mother at least once a week.

With lots of love, I am,

Your devoted brother,
George."

The shock of Quek's tragic death was too much for his mother's feeble body and she passed away a few hours after she heard of the loss of her boy.

On March 2, a double burial took place in the little cemetery at Yazoo City when Major John George Quekemeyer and his mother were laid away to rest.

So Quek has left us. Only his memory lingers, and we think of him as embodying the finest traits of the Army and of West Point; as possessing those admirable qualities in a man that come from a happy disposition but not a frivolous one; as combining gentleness and kindness but not injustice nor indecision; as being generous, dependable, pleasing, and likable; as having no thought of personal gain but only of duty well performed; and then crowning all with a character entirely loyal to the highest ideals, and accepting as a life pledge to service in its fullest meaning and measure, the motto

DUTY HONOR COUNTRY

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, Thou must,
The youth replies, I can".

JOHN BACON McDONALD

No. 2930. Class of 1881.

Died, March 15, 1926, at Washington, D. C., aged 67 years.

Brigadier-General John B. McDonald, U. S. A., Retired, an officer of distinguished service against hostile Indians, in Philippine Campaigns, and in Battles during the World War, died at Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C., March 15, 1926, after being ill since September, 1925.

Two sons and two daughters survive. They are Robert Dyer McDonald, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Lt. John B. McDonald, U. S. N.; Mrs. Gordon McPherson, London, England, and Miss Sue Alston McDonald of Washington. His wife died a little more than a year ago.

General McDonald was born in Alabama, Feb. 8, 1859, and was graduated from the U. S. M. A., in the Class of 1881, when he was assigned to the 25th Infantry. He was transferred to the 10th Cavalry in 1882, and among his many duties he served in the Geronimo Campaign in 1885, and was later on duty with Indian Scouts. He was with the 3d Cavalry in the field in the Philippines, where he was badly wounded in action. A number of superior officers officially attested the ability he displayed. General Lloyd Wheaton, in an official report made at Manila in April, 1901, paid special tribute to the gallantry of Gen. McDonald for his conduct in a fight at Barangobong, P. I. He was at that time captain in the 3d Cavalry.

Gen. Wheaton said: "Capt. J. B. McDonald, 3d Cavalry, 21 men on the firing line, and one sergeant and six men left with horses, struck and defeated 60 insurgents with rifles and 40 bolomen, under Tinio, in a stiff fight, in which he was severely wounded through the right lung. Capt. McDonald was wounded by the first volley, and is deserving of much credit in not permitting his men to know that he was hurt until after the fight was over, thereby averting what might have been a less fortunate ending. The insurgents were on a high mountain with steep ascent. The troops made their fight after scaling this mountain. His immediate commanding officer in transmitting the report, remarks; "There is no braver soldier in the Service than Capt. McDonald'".

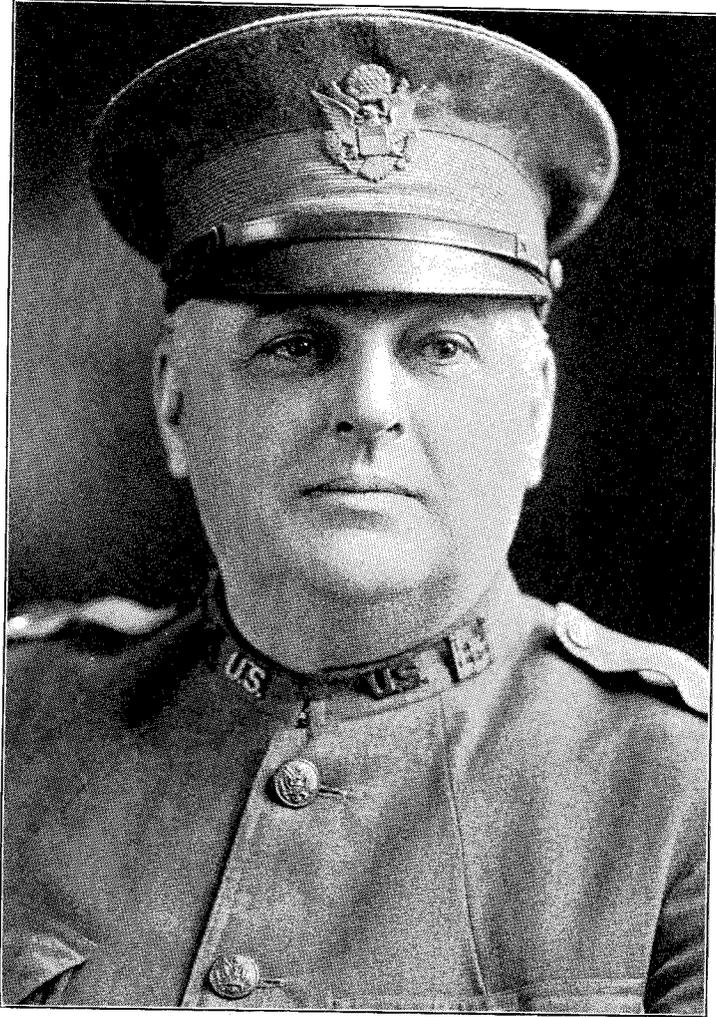

He was awarded the D. S. C. and the D. S. M. by our Government, the Croix de Guerre (with palm) by France, the Croix de Guerre by Belgium, and the War Cross by Italy. The D. S. C. citation follows: "For repeated acts of extraordinary heroism in action near Epionville and Gesnes, France, Sept. 26-30, 1914. He was almost continuously present with the leading elements of his brigade, inspiring his troops by his personal bravery and energy under fire. Near Epionville, when his command was about to make an attack and was under heavy artillery fire, this officer by his disregard for personal safety steadied his men and stimulated them to successful assault on the ridge forming part of the German main line of defense. Two days later with one flank exposed by the withdrawal of the unit on the right, he led his brigade in the attack on and capture of Gesnes".

The D. S. M. citation says: "For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services while commanding the 181st Infantry Brigade during the advance of the 91st Division from Foret de Hesse, Argonne, France, in September, 1918, he was instrumental in the success achieved. He directed the attack in person, and by his example of personal courage and by his sound tactical orders he so inspired his brigade that it was enabled to capture and hold a most important position".

Gen. McDonald was retired for age, Feb. 8, 1923. Funeral services were held Mar. 17, 1926, at St. John's Episcopal Church. Burial was in Arlington National Cemetery with military honors. Honorary pallbearers were Maj. Generals David C. Shanks, Williard A. Holbrook, B. Frank Cheatham, S. D. Rockenbach, Brig.-General Benjamin Alvord and Colonel O. B. Rosenbaum, U. S. A.

Government across a divide between two watersheds.
- 1910—1912. At Detroit, Mich., in charge of the coast survey of the Lakes and of the Harbors of the East shore of Lake Michigan, and for a few months of the light houses in Lakes Huron and Superior. February 27, 1911, commissioned Lt.-Colonel.
- 1912—August, to 1916. Resumed station at Galveston, Texas, in charge of the Galveston Engineering District, covering jetties, dredging, and other harbor improvements, intercoastal canal and locks, etc., in Brazos River, Houston Ship Canal, etc. Was a staunch advocate for Houston Ship Canal and made first survey of same for the Government. Obtained 25 ft. of water at Aransas Pass and built the Texas City Dike which stood the strain of the 1915 hurricane without serious damage. In 1913 was also Chief Engineer Officer Southern Department.
- 1916—1918. Again stationed at Chicago. July 1, 1916, commissioned Colonel.
- 1918—July, to 1921, Jan. Having been offered choice of duty in Philippine Islands or Panama, to which he had replied that aside from duty in France he had no choice, he was ordered to Panama as Chief Engineer officer constructing fortifications. Jan. 18, 1921, retired from the Army voluntarily at own request after 38 yrs., 6 mos. and 17 days service as provided for in Sec. 1243 revised statutes after completion of 30 years service.

1921—to his death, March 20, 1926, Colonel Riché was engaged in consulting engineer work in various parts of the country, basing on St. Louis, Mo. His most notable work was as a member of the Chicago Sanitary District Engineering Board of Review composed of twenty-eight of the country's most eminent engineers from different parts of the United States. This board collected the facts and figures, and made recommendations in the matter of the controversy over the dropping of the water level of all the Great Lakes except Lake Superior.

1926—March 20, died at Hotel Bender, Houston, Texas, of heart failure. Age, 61 years, 8 months. Buried in family vault Christ Church, Philadelphia, March 24, 1926.

Colonel Riché, while an engineer of unusual individuality and initiative, and a student always reaching out for new ideas, was nevertheless a consistent and staunch advocate of standardization and uniformity in engineering work. He followed practical and successful experience, and if his plans embodied any new ideas he always invited and sought criticism and suggestions, and was big enough to change or even discard a pet theory.

From his youth he showed unusual ability, both in theory and practice, in his studies and profession. He had great charm and personal magnetism. Was exceedingly democratic and made many friends for himself and the army among the people with whom he worked.

A talented man, a hard worker, he yet was endowed with a most attractive personality, which endeared him to a host of friends. A true friend—nothing was too much trouble when he had opportunity to befriend those whom he loved and counted as his friends. It is doubtful whether any graduate of the Academy has left more friends in whose memories his delightful personality, his great humanity, his sense of justice, his attractive qualities and his high sense of honor, duty and friendship will live forever.

Colonel Riché was married twice. By his first wife he had two sons, Swift Riché, U. S. Naval Academy, 1914, who survives him, and Major Weir Riché, U. S. Infantry (U. S. M. A., 1916), who was killed in a motorcycle accident in France, December 19, 1918, while in command of the 20th Machine Gun Battalion of the 7th Division. After the death of his first wife in May, 1897, he married in January, 1899, Susan Horton Gadberry, in Galveston, Texas. They had no issue and she preceded him in death many years after their divorce.

Colonel Riché was a member of the following organizations at the time of his death:

Army and Navy Club, Washington; Knight Templar and Shrine of the Masonic Order, American Legion, Elks, American Society of Civil Engineers, Missouri Society of Sons of the American Revolution. He had at different times belonged to the United Veterans of the Spanish American War, South Shore Country Club, Chicago, Illinois Athletic Club, Press Club of Chicago, Society of American Military Engineers, Society of Western Engineers.

This, then, in brief, is the record of another graduate of the United States Military Academy, who, as other graduates have done, are doing and will continue to do, unselfishly, devoted the best years of his life to the service of his own Country, the United States of America.

OSWALD HERBERT ERNST

No. 2024. Class of 1864.

Died, March 21, 1926, at Washington, D. C., aged 83 years.

Major General Oswald Herbert Ernst, U. S. Army, Retired, who died at his home in Washington, D. C., March 21, 1926, had a distinguished record that included active field service in the Civil War and the War with Spain. He was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, June 27, 1842, the son of Andrew Henry and Sarah Otis Ernst. The grandfather of General Ernst, John G. Ernst, native of Hanover, Germany, was educated at Gottingen and as a government official fled to the United States when Napoleon conquered his country in 1805, and settled at Cincinnati, Ohio. The father of General Ernst was nine years old at the time of the emigration. In 1841 he married at Boston, Miss Sarah H. Otis, daughter of George Alexander Otis, a member of a well-known Massachusetts family, and on June 27, 1842, at Cincinnati there was born to them a son, the subject of this sketch.

Oswald H. Ernst attended private schools and matriculated at Harvard with the Class of 1862 when only sixteen years old. After two years at this University he was appointed to the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. Having entered on July 1, 1860, he graduated June 13, 1864, No. 6 in his Class, and was commissioned a 1st Lieutenant, Corps of Engineers. This young and promising officer served during the Civil War, 1864-65. He was Assistant Engineer of the Army of the Tennessee during Sherman's Georgia Campaign, July 21 to September 23, 1864, and participated in the battle and siege of Atlanta, July 22 to August 5, 1864, and the battle of Ezra Church, July 28, 1864. At the end of the Atlanta Campaign he was transferred to the Pacific Coast as Assistant Engineer on fortification there.

MAJOR GENERAL OSWALD HERBERT ERNST

On March 13, 1865, in recognition of Faithful and Meritorious Services, Oswald H. Ernst was brevetted Captain. He was promoted to a Captaincy, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., March 7, 1867.

In May, 1868, Capt. Ernst was ordered from the Pacific Coast to the command of an Engineer Company at Willet's Point, Long Island. In 1870 he was detailed to accompany the party of scientists the United States sent to Spain to observe the Solar Eclipse, and soon after returning was ordered to West Point as Instructor of Practical Military Engineering. On relief in 1878 from this tour at the Military Academy, he was assigned to engineering work in connection with rivers and harbors. During this period (1878-1889) he served on the Mississippi and Missouri River Commissions and on numerous important boards having to do with harbors and bridges.

Capt. Ernst was promoted to Major, Corps of Engineers, May 5, 1882, and on September 7, 1889, was detailed in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds, Washington, D. C., with the temporary rank of Colonel. In June, 1893, he was ordered to West Point as Superintendent, U. S. Military Academy. Subsequently he received the following promotions in the regular service: Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers, March 31, 1895; Colonel, February 20, 1903; Brigadier General, June 27, 1906; Major General, Retired, November 2, 1916.

On February 25, 1905, Colonel Ernst was appointed President of the Mississippi River Commission, which important position he continued to fill until retirement from active duty. Among other professional services rendered were those in connection with membership on the Isthmian Canal Commission, the International Commission on waters adjacent to boundary lines between Canada and the United States, as President of the Board of Consulting Engineers to examine plans for the protection of the valley of the Miami River, Ohio, and as member of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Company.

At the outbreak of the Spanish War he was commissioned Brigadier General of Volunteers, and in June, 1898, left West Point to assume command of a Brigade of Infantry at Chickamauga. The following month, as a part of General James H. Wilson's command, he entered upon the Porto Rican campaign, took part in the landing operations at Guanico and Ponce and the engagements at Coamo and Mt. Asamante. After the armistice of August, 1898, he was given the important assignment of Inspector General for the Island of Cuba. He returned to the United States in 1900 and resumed his numerous duties as member and President of Engineering Boards and Commissions, with station at Washington, D. C.

General Ernst was retired on reaching the age limit, June 27, 1906, but continued to serve the Government as Director of the Panama Railroad and in other capacities many years longer.

Such in brief is the military history of this distinguished graduate of the Military Academy. The respect in which he was held by his associates is well indicated by the following resolution of the Mississippi River Commission, June 19, 1906:

"In view of the retirement of our President soon to occur, we wish to place on our records some expressions of our high regard for him as a man, a soldier, a presiding officer, and a friend, and our sincere regret at the necessity of this separation. During General Ernst's incumbency of the office of President of the Mississippi River Commission we have been witnessess of the dignity, impartiality and ability which he has brought to its administration. He has set us continually an example of industry, thoroughness and courtesy, which have contributed not only to the agreeableness of our work but to its efficiency as well. We shall miss him from our circle with a keen sense of deprivation. We are glad to know that his retirement from the active list of the army will not mean condemnation to a life of idleness; and we hope that the Government will be wise enough to have high and useful work for him as long as he shall be willing to do it. We hereby extend to him an invitation to be a guest of honor on the steamer Mississippi whenever it shall be agreeable to him to accept the invitation; and the Secretary is directed to send to him such of the printed publications of the Commission as he shall care to receive so long as he shall be disposed to accept them. Our best wishes for his long life, health and happiness will follow him after his retirement".

In 1866 General Ernst married Miss Elizabeth Amory Lee, daughter of Mr. Raymond Lee of Boston, Massachusetts. Mrs. Ernst and two daughters, Miss Helen Ernst and Mrs. William Morton Grinnell, and two grandchildren survive him.

General Ernst was a member of The Metropolitan and Chevy Chase Clubs of Washington, Loyal Legion of the United State, Military Order of Foreign Wars and American Society of Civil Engineers, and was honorary Vice-President of the Wisconsin National Guard. The latter unusual distinction showed the respect and admiration in which he was held by the officers and men of the Second and Third Wisconsin National Guard regiments which were under his command during the Spanish War.

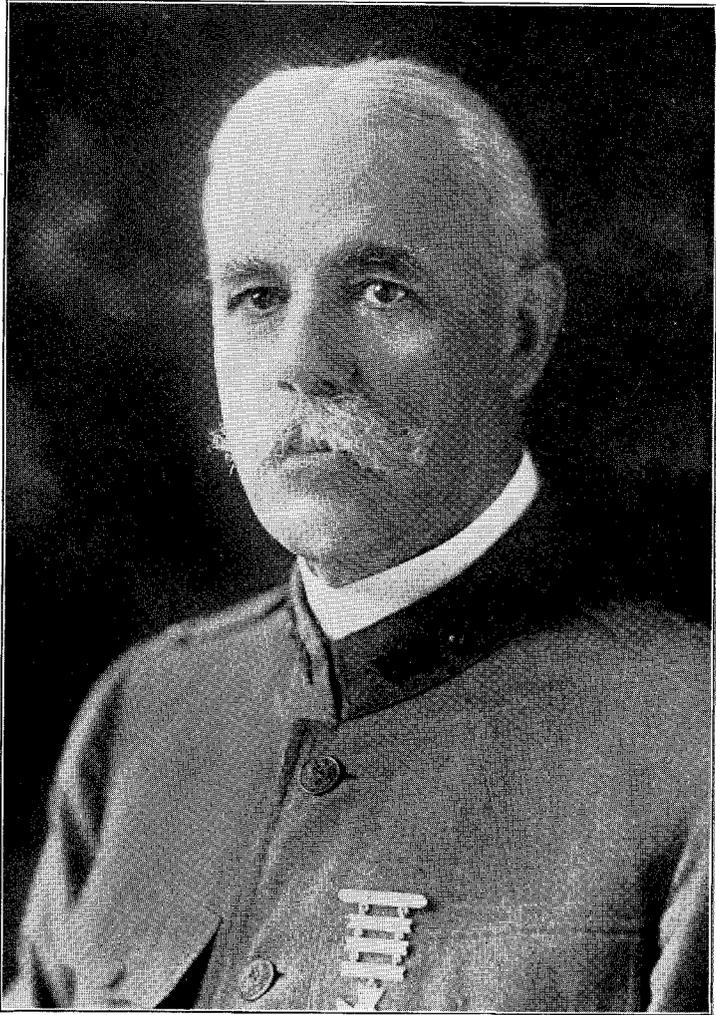

General Ernst was an able, loyal and conscientious officer. Of impressive presence, his inborn dignity was tempered by a kindly and sympathetic disposition that endeared him to all who knew him intimately. He had great capacity for work, and the important duties assigned to him were always accomplished with thoroughness and efficiency. He had all the essential qualities of a gentleman, not the least important manifestation of which was the unfailing courtesy with which he treated all with whom he came in contact.

It certainly can be truly said that the career of General Ernst is one among those of the noted graduates of the Military Academy that gave inspiration to the following lines:

"Broadcast upon our history's ample page
The records of their valiant deeds are strown
Proudly their Alma Mater claims her own
May she have sons like these from age to age".

COLONEL STANHOPE ENGLISH BLUNT

STANHOPE ENGLISH BLUNT

No. 2413. Class of 1872.

Died, March 22, 1926, at Palm Beach, Fla., aged 75 years.

Colonel Stanhope E. Blunt, U. S. Army, was born at Boston, Mass., Sept. 29, 1850, the son of Colonel Charles E. Blunt, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army (Class of 1846 U. S. M. A.) and Penelope Bethune English, daughter of Major Thomas Stanhope English, Marine Corps U. S. Navy. He was descended from a long line of New England ancestors, the first of the Blunt family in this country settling at Andover, Mass. in 1634; several generations later one of them, who graduated from Harvard College in 1727, became a clergyman in Newcastle, N. H. and his descendants were shipowners and masters in that town and in Portsmouth, N. H. His grandfather moved to Brooklyn, N. Y. about one hundred years ago where he engaged in business and finally became president of a bank in that city. By marriages Colonel Blunt was descended also from families of prominence in the early history of New England, among them those of Frost, Pepperell, Sheafe, Marsh, Sherburne, Faneuil, Bethune and English of Portsmouth and Boston.

He attended public and private schools in Boston, and then his father being stationed at Oswego, N. Y., graduated from the High School of that city in 1868 and that summer receiving an appointment to West Point, entered the Academy on Sept. 1, 1868 in the Class of 1872.

At the following January examination he was head of the class, an honor he retained throughout the course in mathematics but never quite reached again in general standing, but always taking high rank he finally graduated June 14, 1872, number three in a class of 57 members. While a cadet he was prominent in the class, being a Cadet Sergeant, a Cadet Lieutenant, and during his first class year a Cadet acting assistant professor, teaching French for a year to sections of the then fourth class. During his first class camp he was the senior Hop Manager and much interested in all the social activities of the class.

Commissioned 2nd Lieutenant 13th U. S. Infantry he first served at Camp Douglas, Salt Lake City, Utah, during the winter of 1872-73, part of the time with his Company and part as Post Adjutant. During the following summer he was assistant engineer on an expedition of exploration and survey of northwestern Wyoming, including the then little known Yellowstone National Park, and the following winter was in Omaha, Neb. at Headquarters Department of the Platte engaged in preparation of the expedition's report.

Promoted 1st Lieut. in March, 1874, he was ordered to Fort Fred Steele, Wyoming, and to the command of a company of the 13th Infantry, but in July was again detached and assigned to engineering duty in charge of a party engaged in surveys "West of the 100th Meridian" in Colorado and New Mexico.

Having been transferred to the Ordnance Department, he was in January, 1875, ordered to Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., and for eighteen months as an assistant at that Arsenal was connected with the manufacture of small-arms ammunition and with other work as an Ordnance officer.

From August, 1876, to August, 1880, he was at the Military Academy as an instructor in Mathematics, and for the last two years of that period instructed also in Ordnance and the Science of Gunnery. While on duty at West Point he was for two years Treasurer of the Army Mess (or Club) and for two years Secretary of the Society of Graduates of the Academy.

Promoted to be Captain of Ordnance he was in September, 1880, ordered to St. Paul, Minn. as Chief Ordnance Officer of the Department of Dakota, and a few months later with the headquarters moved to Fort Snelling, Minn. and was also appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice of the Department.

In this dual capacity he visited many of the Military posts in Montana and the Dakotas, and specializing in small arms firing became an expert shot, participating in and conducting different matches and department competitions, winning various prizes and medals, and preparing many drafts for department orders which were issued for the instruction and guidance of troops in the Department of Dakota.

His activities becoming widely known he was in the fall of 1883, upon the recommendation of General Terry, commanding the Department of Dakota, and of General Benét, the Chief of Ordnance of the Army, selected by the Secretary of War to prepare a manual or tactics for the instruction of the Army in rifle firing, which upon its completion under the title "Rifle and Carbine Firing" was adopted in January, 1885, and under the revision which he made and which was called "Firing Regulations for Small Arms" continued as the authorized guide for the Army and National Guard for nearly fifteen years.

In November, 1884, he was selected by Lieut.-General Sheridan as Inspector of Small Arms Practice for the Army, ordered to Washington, and a year later appointed by General Sheridan a Lieutenant-Colonel and Aide-de-Camp on his personal staff, serving in these capacities until General Sheridan's death in August, 1888.

He continued for a year in Washington with General Schofield in charge of rifle firing, and during this period also had charge, under General Schofield, of the handling of the parade held in New York in April, 1889, in celebration of the centennial of the Inauguration of President Washington, a parade composed of nearly 50,000 troops of the Army, Navy and National Guard of many states.

In July, 1889, he was relieved from duty in Washington, the official general order to that effect from the Headquarters of the Army stating in part "Captain Blunt's services in connection with the development of an effective system of rifle practice in the Army, have been of the highest importance, and his name will long be honorably connected with this great advance in the Military service of the country". This terminated a sphere of duty extending over a period of nine years that had brought Captain Blunt, still a young man, to the knowledge, and it may also be said to the favorable judgment, of the greater portion of the Army of that day.

In August, 1889, he commenced a service of five years at the Springfield Armory, Mass., and besides duty there in the manufacture of rifles was inspector at the Colt's factory, Hartford, Conn., of the manufacture of pistols and machine guns. He was also a member and the recorder of the board of officers which in 1894 selected, after extensive tests, a magazine rifle to replace for the Army the old single loading Springfield. While serving at Springfield he was a delegate to the International Congress of Military Engineers at the World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago, in July, 1893, where he presented and read an essay on "The Modern Military Rifle".

In the fall of 1894 he was ordered to duty at Watervliet Arsenal, Troy, N. Y., where he had charge of the gun factory for two and one-half years until March, 1897, when though still only a Captain he was selected by General Flagler, Chief of Ordnance, for the important command of Rock Island Arsenal, Illinois, where he remained for over ten years. His administration included the period of the Spanish War, when in a few months the Arsenal was expanded from an establishment having less than 500 employees to one with over 3000. He installed the electrical development of its water power, erected shops and other buildings, installed much new machinery including a complete plant for the manufacture of small arms, and greatly increased the manufacturing facilities of the Arsenal, while at the same time reducing the cost of its output. If viewed from the expansion of the same Arsenal 20 years later during the World War, this service was not so remarkable, but in the light of that day it was deemed highly commendable. From General Flagler, Chief of Ordnance, he received emphatic commendation in several successive annual reports, and a report of the Inspector General said in part "The extent, variety and excellence of results obtained at this Arsenal, the freedom from scandal or criticism, the general excellent condition of the Arsenal and its readiness for expansion to meet emergencies, reflect great credit upon the commanding officer, Colonel Blunt".

While at Rock Island he was successively promoted Major, Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel Ordnance Department, the last commission under date of June 25, 1906. Incidentally he also laid out on the Arsenal Island an eighteen hole golf course, organized a golf club, erected under permit from the Secretary of War, and with the club's money, a commodious club house which the government uses for official receptions and similar assemblies, and was for ten years president of the club. This non-military service of Col. Blunt was in some ways of parallel importance with his official work; bringing together the prominent citizens of the three neighboring cities it made of them warm friends for the Arsenal who assisted in the efforts to enhance its importance and increase its efficiency as a government manufacturing establishment. Col. Blunt was highly esteemed by the people of Rock Island and Moline, Illinois, and Davenport, Iowa.

In August, 1907, Col. Blunt returned to the Springfield Armory, this time as its commanding officer, where he remained for five years. During most of this period he was, next to the Chief of Ordnance, the senior officer of the Department, and served as president of many boards of officers for promotions, for selection of officers for detail to the Corps, and for various other purposes.

On Sept. 1, 1912, he was upon his own application retired from active duty after 44 years of service. General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, in forwarding his application to the Secretary of War, said in part "Col. Blunt is an able officer, whose services are of the highest value to the Ordnance Department. He has during his forty years' service as an officer, satisfactorily filled many selective positions, requiring skill, ability and good judgment. His retirement will be a loss to the department".

For some years Col. Blunt occupied himself in travel and in participation in several important civic matters in Springfield, until on April 7, 1917, the day following our declaration of war with Germany, he was ordered back to active service and to duty in the office of the Chief of Ordnance in Washington, where he remained for sixteen months, at first as the Ordnance Department representative on the General Munitions Board of the Council of National Defense, and as the representative on the War Industries Board, and after January, 1918, as Supervisor of Manufacturing Arsenals, duties that brought him in contact with many prominent men of affairs and required visits of inspection and direction to Arsenals with which he had previously been actively connected. Mr. Frank A. Scott, who had been head of the General Munitions Board and of the War Industries Board, in reporting several years later on these services said in part, "The splendid zeal which Col. Blunt brought to this service, coupled with his experience as an Arsenal commander, his intelligence in dealing with manufacturing and material problems, his tact and resourcefulness and industry, and the grave responsibilities which he carried through the long period mentioned, would seem most justly and worthily to entitle him to the recognition of the Distinguished Service Medal".

And Brig. Gen. C. B. Wheeler, under whom as Acting Chief of Ordnance, much of Col. Blunt's service had been given also said of the service with the War Industries Board "He was untiring in his efforts and I doubt very much if there was at that time available any one person who combined the qualities that were so desirable for such a representative as Col. Blunt. There was no person in Washington who would have accomplished more than he did in securing raw material of the kind that was needed and at the time it was needed for the plans of the Ordnance Department". Gen. Wheeler also continued his report "Subsequently, when matters had arranged themselves later in the war so that Col. Blunt's services might be utilized in another equally important direction, he was selected by the Chief of Ordnance for the duty of supervisor of all Arsenals, a position for which he was more than well qualified, as no officer had at that time greater experience and greater capabilities along this line than he. The performance of this duty was excellent in every respect. He was given and accepted the authority that had, theretofore, attached to the Chief of Ordnance in a more personal way and it is to his untiring energy and ability that the Arsenals as a whole throughout the Ordnance Department were able to accomplish what they did accomplish towards the success of the war".

On the conclusion of his war service, Col. Blunt returned to Springfield and resumed the connection with different civic affairs which had begun while he was still in command of the Armory before his retirement. For five years he was president of the Springfield Country Club, and for two years president of the Century Club. In 1911 he was elected a trustee of the Springfield Hospital and later served four years as president of the board. He was also for several years chairman of the Transportation Commission of Springfield; was president of the Boys' Exposition; was appointed by the Governor of Massachusetts a trustee of the Monson State Hospital, and in 1914 by the Mayor of Springfield a member of the city's Park Commission, being for many years its president. In 1921 he became a member of the Springfield Planning Board participating in the preparation of the plans for city development and in the zoning regulations which were later adopted by the City Council. Since 1922 he has been a member of the Board, appointed by the Council to regulate city signs or billboards.

In 1909 he was elected a member of the vestry of Christ Episcopal Church of Springfield, and so continued until his election as a Warden of the church in 1923. He also served for many years as Treasurer of the Parish. To all these varied offices he brought the same attention and efficiency which had characterized his military duty and his services were always eagerly sought after and highly appreciated.

At the first reunion of his class after graduation Blunt was chosen class secretary and continued the duties of that office until his death. He was greatly interested in the class, had been by his classmates early dubbed "Old Statistics", always kept its records with accuracy and circulated them among the class at each of its reunions, particularly at the 50th reunion in June, 1922, when he furnished very complete statistical records to all surviving members. Following his two years' service as Secretary of the Association of Graduates, while on duty as an instructor at the Academy, he had been interested in the affairs of that organization, and for a number of years past had prepared for the Association's annual publication obituary notices of those of his class who had passed away during the successive years. Regarding his work as Class Secretary one of his class recently wrote; "The systematic records he kept of the class and from time to time distributed to individual members have been a source of infinite comfort to me. I do not know that I can fully appreciate the amount of time, thought and labor he gave to keeping track of individual members of the class, and in bringing information secured into systematic order; but I know that it has extended over more than fifty years; that it has fostered the fraternal spirit of the class, and made every one of us a better man; that no living member of the class can recall the name of Blunt without a glow at the heart; and that no member of the class can scarcely be recalled by any of us without a simultaneous remembrance of Blunt. I shall carry with pleasure to my grave my load of gratitude for the labor of love he has performed".

Col. Blunt was much interested in travel and enjoyed the many official journeys he had to take from time to time, always including in them as much sightseeing as the opportunity permitted. While in command of the Springfield Armory he took advantage of a two months' leave of absence for a motor trip abroad with his family, motoring several thousand miles in France and England. Some years later, with his wife, he made a cruise in the Mediterranean, visiting Egypt and returning through Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium and England. In 1921, again with his wife, he went on a cruise in the Caribbean, and in its course made the passage from Havana to Key West by hydroplane, a somewhat unusual experience at that date though more commonplace today.

Before retirement he built a house in Springfield which he had since occupied, though spending some time at the Massachusetts sea shore in summers and at Palm Beach and other Florida resorts in winters.

Colonel Blunt, when a 2nd Lieutenant of Infantry, was married on Nov. 18, 1873, at Clinton, N. Y. to Fanny Smyth, daughter of Charles Smyth of Oswego, N. Y. They had three daughters, the eldest Katherine, graduated at Vassar College in 1898, and after studying at Berlin, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Chicago received in 1907 the degree of Ph. D. from the University of Chicago. For some years past she has been Associate Professor of Chemistry in the Department of Home Economics at that University.

The second daughter, Evelyn Bethune, married in 1907, Arthur D. Ficke of Davenport, Iowa; he was a graduate of Harvard University, and during the war with Germany was a Lieut.-Colonel, Ordnance Department U. S. Army, serving in Washington and France.

The youngest daughter, Frances Smyth, married in 1910 Lewis E. Tift of Springfield; a Williams College man who during the war with Germany was a Captain Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, serving in Washington and in England and France, being assistant to the Chief Ordnance officer of the 1st Army.

Col. Blunt was frequently selected by the social clubs to which he belonged for administrative positions, all of which he filled to the apparent satisfaction of his fellow members. He had retained membership in the Metropolitan Club and Army and Navy Club of Washington, the University Club of New York, and the Country Club, Nayasset Club, Colony Club and Century Club of Springfield.

He was a member of a number of patriotic societies, including the Society of Colonial Wars, Sons of the Revolution, War of 1812, Naval Order of the U. S., American Wars, Foreign Wars, Loyal Legion, Sons of Veterans, American Legion and Military Order of the World War.

He was also a member of the National Geographic Society, of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and of the Army Ordnance Association.

The following Editorial from the Morning Union, Springfield, Mass., is a well merited tribute to the personality and character of Col. Blunt.:

"The news of the sudden death in Florida of Colonel Stanhope E. Blunt came as a sad shock to Springfield, with whose interests he had long been identified, both as Commandant of the United States Army and as a public-spirited citizen and leader in civic affairs. Col. Blunt's interest in Springfield began more than thirty years ago, when, as a captain in the Ordnance Corps, he was stationed in this city. His attractive personality made him exceedingly popular here and he in turn developed a strong liking for the city and its people, which was increased in later years when he returned as commandant of the Armory and, upon his retirement, resulted in his selection of this city as his permanent abode.

"The qualities which made of Col. Blunt an especially fine type of military officer persisted after his return to civilian life. Courteous, painstaking, thorough and conscientious in everything he undertook to do, his efforts were usually crowned with success. He was patriotic, as an army officer should be, and public-spirited to the last degree, always willing to give the best in him for the public welfare and seeking no reward other than the consciousness of duty well performed. Springfield owes much to him and will treasure his memory with the highest regard".

THOMAS WARD

No. 2010. Class of 1863.

Died, March 25, 1926, at Rochester, N. Y., aged 87 years.

Thomas Ward was born at West Point, March 18, 1839, his father being Registrar of the Academy at that time. He entered the Academy as a cadet in 1859 and upon graduation in 1863 was promoted to Second Lieutenant, 1st Artillery.

Joining the Army of the Potomac almost immediately, he served at Warrenton, Va., and then after a sick leave, he served as draft officer at Columbus, Ohio. During the Richmond Campaign of 1864 he served with a light battery attached to the Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, participating in the Engagements of Cold Harbor, Barker's Mills, Bottom's Bridge, Yellow Tavern, Seminary Church, and Charles City, C. H., and engaging in Wilson's Raid to Ream's and Roanoke Stations, with constant heavy skirmishes.

He received the Brevet of First Lieutenant, June 3, 1864, for Gallant and Meritorious Services at Cold Harbor, and the Brevet of Captain, March 13, 1865, for Good Conduct and Gallant Services during the Rebellion. After Wilson's Raid he was recommended by General Wilson for Brevet Captain for Bravery of the Highest Degree, Zeal and Good Management during the rapid and exhausting marches and fights incidental to Operation against the South Side and Danville Railroads, Virginia. The recommendation for Brevet of Captain was a mistake, inasmuch as Ward already held that rank. It was General Wilson's intention to recommend him for Brevet Major. Through error in the War Department no action was taken on the recommendation, and it was not until many years after that General Wilson learned of the mistake and took steps to correct his recommendation.

After the termination of the war, Ward served in various garrison posts including, Ft. Trumbull, Conn., Ft. Ontario, N. Y., Ft. Riley, Kan., Ft. Hamilton, N. Y., David's Island, N. Y., and Ft. Barrancas, Fla. From 1873 to 1877 he served as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.

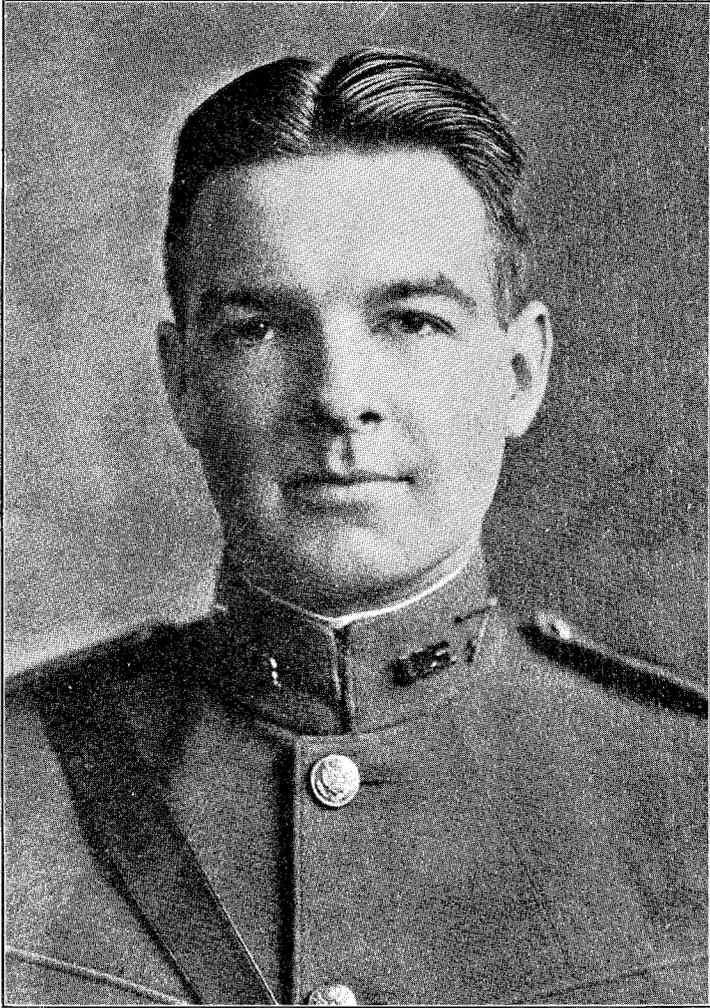

In 1884, he entered the Adjutant General's Department serving until 1889 as assistant in the Adjutant General's office, Washington, D. C., as assistant to the Adjutant General, Dept. of the Columbia, from 1889 to 1893, as Adjutant General, Dept. of the Colorado, 1893 to 1896, as Assistant Adjutant General and Inspector of Small Arms Practice, Dept. of the East, 1896, 1897, and as Principal Assistant in the Adjutant General's Office, Washington, D. ### DAVID STANLEY HOLBROOK

No. 6381. Class of 1921.

Died, March 27, 1926, at Camp Stotsenburg, aged 25 years.

David Stanley Holbrook was born on Angel Island, California, April 20, 1900.

As a result of a state wide competitive examination, he was appointed to the Military Academy from Wisconsin and entered in June 1917.

He was graduated with his class at its early graduation, November first, 1918, and assigned to the Cavalry.

He returned to the Academy after the Armistice as a Student officer. This duty was completed June 13, 1919, after which he accompanied his Class on its tour of Europe during the summer of 1919.

On his return he was ordered to the Cavalry School at Ft. Riley, Kansas, as a student in the first Basic Course. Graduating from the Cavalry School in June 1920, he was assigned to the 16th Cavalry and continued to serve with troops until September 1922 when he was detailed to Princeton University as a student. Being especially interested in the study of Spanish, he sought and received permission to spend his 1923 summer vacation in Spain for the purpose of studying that language. While there he made good use of his opportunities to see Spain and Morocco and traveled extensively for that purpose. He returned to Princeton in September to complete his course. While at Princeton he instructed in equitation and was captain of the University polo team, leading it to brilliant victory and the 1924 United States College Championship.

He was given his A. B. degree with honors in 1924.

Upon completion of his tour at Princeton, he was assigned to the 26th Cavalry at Camp Stotsenburg, with which regiment he was serving at the time of his death. He received the commendation of his superiors for the excellence of his work.

He also greatly distinguished himself in polo while serving in the Philippines.

He had planned to return home by way of India and Spain, desiring to spend some months in the latter country for the further study of Spanish.

Lieutenant Holbrook came from a long line of distinguished ancestry. He was a descendant of Francis Cooke who came to Plymouth in the Mayflower in 1620; a great grandson of General J. J. B. Wright, Medical Corps, U. S. Army; a grandson of Major General David S. Stanley, U. S. Army; and a son of Major General Willard Ames Holbrook, formerly Chief of Cavalry, U. S. Army. From Revolutionary times his family, of which Nathan Hale was a notable member, has been active in the defense of this country.

Those fortunate ones who knew Stanley well, learned to love and admire him. He was cheerful, loyal, generous to a fault, a wonderful comrade and a true friend. Having acquired the highest ideals in early life, he held to them as a cadet and officer. His country has lost a fine officer and his friends have lost a comrade whom they will always remember.

Lieutenant Holbrook is survived by his father and one brother, Lieutenant Willard Ames Holbrook, Jr.

CHARLES STUART DONAVIN

No. 4356. Class of 1905.

Died, May 27, 1926, at Elizabeth, New Jersey, aged 44 years.

Charles Stuart Donavin, son of the late Colonel George B. Donavin and Edith Jones Donavin, was born May 12, 1882, Marion, Ohio. His early youth was spent in the schools of Marion and Delaware, Ohio.

CAPTAIN CHARLES STUART DONAVIN

Some time prior to his entrance to the United States Military Academy, in 1900, he moved with his father's family to Columbus, Ohio, where his father conducted a large business in clothing under the title of the Geo. B. Donavin Clothing Company, located on State Street. During the Spanish-American War, his father was an officer in the Quartermaster Corps of the Ohio National Guard, and served with distinction in Cuba.

"Don", as he was known to his classmates, was appointed a cadet to the United States Military Academy in 1900 from Ohio, and entered upon his duties thereat on June 11th of the same year. As a cadet he took a very active part in all class matters and spent a great deal of his time in working for the good of his class without regard to his own studies.

During his four years at the academy he attained, in succession, the rank of Corporal, Sergeant, and Lieutenant in the Corps of Cadets, was a member of the Howitzer Board as a class editor, took a prominent part in the Hundredth Night, 1904 and 1905, and was a member of the Hundredth Night Committee, 1905.

As a cadet he was popular with all with whom he came in contact for he was possessed of that ability so necessary to win and retain friendships. Those who knew him best realized that he possessed wonderful qualities of both head and heart. He devoted considerable time during his life as a cadet, in assisting the "Goats" of his class with their studies. At graduation, he stood No. 18 in class standing.

Upon graduation from the U. S. Military Academy, June 13, 1905, he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Infantry, and assigned to the 27th Infantry.

He served with that regiment, including service in Cuba in reconstruction work, until he was detailed as a First Lieutenant; Ordnance Department, July 1, 1909. He, then, served as an ordnance officer at Sandy Hook Proving Ground, N. J., until July 3, 1910 when he was detailed as a student officer at the Ordnance School of Application located at Sandy Hook Proving Ground. Upon completion of the course at this school, July 1, 1911, he was detailed as Assistant Instructor at the same school from that date to June 15, 1912. In the meantime, on March 1, 1911, he was promoted to the grade of First Lieutenant of Infantry. On September 18, 1911, he was detailed as a Captain, Ordnance Department.

Having completed his tour of duty as Assistant Instructor at the Ordnance School of Application, he was detailed as a student officer at Watertown Arsenal, Mass., and served at that station from June 16, 1912, to June 19, 1913, when he was relieved from detail in the Ordnance Department. He then took a leave of absence from June 20, 1913, to September 15, 1913, and upon expiration of his leave, he proceeded to Texas City, Texas to join the 23rd Infantry to which he had been assigned on June 20, 1913.

He served under the tropical sun of Texas with his regiment until he was again detailed as a Captain, Ordnance Department on June 20, 1914. He was immediately transferred to Galveston, Texas, where, from June 20, 1914, he served as Chief Ordnance Officer of the Port of Embarkation operated in that city in connection with the sending of American troops to Vera Cruz, Mexico, in 1914. On September 17, 1914, he was selected to command the Ordnance Field Depot at Galveston, Texas, and continued to serve in that capacity until he resigned, December 28, 1914, in order that he might take his sick children to a healthier climate.

However, the same brilliant and sterling qualities which characterized his life as a cadet, and services as an officer, did not forsake him when he resigned and went into civil life. He immediately applied his hand to work, and became the Factory Superintendent, American Tobacco Company, New York City. He served with great credit with this company from January 1, 1915, to February 1, 1917 on which date he became the Production Manager of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, 150 Bay Street, Jersey City, New Jersey.

In 1911, he married Carolyn Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Williams of Elizabeth, New Jersey, and lived in that city until his untimely death, which followed several years of declining health. He became a member of Trinity Episcopal Church of that city and spent much of his time in aiding the work of the Boy Scouts. He was also active in the work of the Home Guards of Elizabeth, of which he was a member for several years.

Until his health failed completely about three weeks prior to his death, he had been for some time, the manager of the food products department of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, with offices in Jersey City.

Among the societies in which Captain Donavin held membership were the Machinery Club of New York City, the Army and Navy Club, the Army Ordnance Association, the Elizabeth Town and County Club, and Suburban Club.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Carolyn Donavin, he leaves three daughters, the Misses Elizabeth, Jean and Carolyn Donavin, all of 1253 Waverly Place, Elizabeth, New Jersey. His sister Mary, now Mrs. Ernest J. Springer, resides at 863 Kilsyth Road, Elizabeth, New Jersey. His mother Mrs. George B. Donavin makes her home with his sister Mary. He is also survived by a brother, Mr. H. K. Donavin, who is a graduate of the Naval Academy but who now lives in San Francisco, California.
