ADDRESS OF PROFESSOR DAVIES.

FELLOW GRADUATES: The day of our annual meeting has again brought us together. Let us rejoice that we have seen this day. Let us rejoice that we are permitted again to meet and welcome each other, at the place so dear to us all, and to bring to the cradle of our youth the offerings of affection and love. Here we first assumed special obligations to our country, and here, in the fulness of age, we again renew our allegiance at the altar of duty; and may that altar stand here through all time, be seen by all eyes, and receive the homage of all hearts.

But why should I congratulate you in feeble words, when all nature bids us welcome. The forests have put on their richest robes—the mountains receive us with the dignity of patriarchs—the river welcomes us with the graces of maternal love; while the little nooks and by-ways, from which, in early life, we looked out on all that is grand and lovely in nature, like the younger sisters of a household, greet us with their sweet smiles of perpetual youth. The flag, the emblem of our nationality, which has symbolized to this institution the power and dignity of the nation for seventy years, waves us a cordial welcome. A day spent here together is a volume of living history reaching over more than half a century. It is a day full of memories and full of joys. The reveille of the morning seems the reveille of a new life. The morning light is fresher than the morning light of other days, the noon has a fuller glory, and the evening a softer radiance, while all around points to the past and to the future.

If the spirits of the illustrious dead are permitted to surround the monuments which affection and patriotism have here raised to their memories—if they are permitted to revisit the scenes dear to them in life—then we are not alone here to-day; for those who are ever present with us in their lives and their example, participate in all that we do and in all that we feel—and these occasions become, as they were intended to be, connecting links between the living and the dead.

But these gatherings have yet another significance. They admonish the young cadet, that when he enters the Military Academy, he writes his name on a leaf of history where it becomes an abiding record, and where the whole country will read it. He then connects himself, permanently, with his Alma Mater, sharing in all its past honors and all the glories of its future history. In his hours of labor these thoughts will nerve him—in his hours of weakness they will strengthen him—in his hours of sadness they will cheer him—and in his hours of triumph they will reward him.

But above all, fellow graduates, let us remember that the nation which sustains and has spread its mantle over this institution, expects from every graduate, at all times, and wheresoever he may be, the full measure of his duty. And when the evening of life shall come, and each one of us shall look back, for the last time, on the fading scenes of the past, may he be cheered by the thought that he has never for a moment been unmindful of this obligation, and that guided by it and by a higher wisdom, he has walked always in the path of duty, virtue, and honor.

NECROLOGY.

The Secretary being called upon for the Necrology of Graduates, for the year ending June 16, 1871, presented the following :

JOHN E. HOSMER,

Died July 13, 1870, at Camp Douglass, Utah: Aged 29.

LIEUTENANT JOHN E. HOSMER was born in Templeton, Mass., November 15, 1841. He was appointed a Cadet in 1861, and upon graduating was assigned as Second Lieutenant in the Sixteenth Infantry, where his soldierly qualities soon caused him to be selected as Adjutant of his regiment.

In January, 1867, he was made A. A. A. G. Department of Georgia, in addition to regimental duties, and in the many delicate and important matters requiring his decision he acted with singular judgment and ability. In the summer of 1868, he was detailed on signal duty in Washington, and remained as Signal Officer for two years, four months excepted, when he was on duty at West Point as Assistant Instructor of Tactics. At the time of his death he had just joined the Thirteenth Infantry, to which he had lately been assigned.

(Lieutenant John P. Story.)

WILLIAM T. H. BROOKS,

No. 1104—CLASS OF 1841.

Died July 19, 1870, at Huntsville, Ala.: Aged 49.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WILLIAM T. H. BROOKS was born in Ohio. At the age of sixteen, having received the appointment of Cadet at the U. S. Military Academy, he entered that institution July 1, 1837, as one of a class of 113 members. At the time of his admission he was full-grown, possessing a tall, manly figure quite in contrast to a majority of his class who were boys in stature. With a temperament rather quiet than restless, his deportment while at the Academy was noticeable for native simplicity alike free from assumption and diffidence. Neither taciturn, reticent, nor factious, he possessed sufficient geniality to be companionable. His calm dispassionate nature, his simple unaffected manners, and his manly soldierly qualities, as might be inferred, carried him peaceably through his academic career—antagonistic to none, but friendly and companionable with all his class-mates.

Lieutenant Brooks served in the war with Mexico with marked efficiency and gallantry from the beginning to the end, from the battle of Palo Alto to the capture of the Mexican Capital, September 14, 1847, being present and taking his part in every battle on both lines of operations, excepting only those of Buena Vista and Molino del Rey.

Throughout this war, whether acting as company officer or adjutant-general of a division, he evinced high soldierly qualities, and no one will question that the two brevets conferred upon him were distinctions well earned and well deserved. In fact, at this time he was one of the prominent young officers of the army.

Promoted to a Captaincy November 10, 1851, he served for the next ten years, except while on sick leave, at Western frontier posts, mostly in New Mexico, where he was frequently engaged in scouting against the marauding and troublesome Indian tribes—a laborious duty, bringing little reward to the soldier, but involving the hardships of campaign life with loss of health.

Captain Brooks was commissioned a Brigadier-General of Volunteers September 23, 1861. Few officers of the army at this time were more experienced in the duties of actual warfare than General Brooks, for he had passed nearly twenty years in active service in Florida, in Mexico, and on the Western frontiers. So in the War of the Rebellion, till the failure of his health and his resignation July 14, 1864, his service was mostly in the field in the presence of the enemy. In the campaigns of the Peninsula and Maryland, in each of which he was wounded, on the Rappahannock, and at the operations in front of Richmond and Petersburg, he was engaged in a series of battles too numerous to be set forth in this brief notice. They are on record, however, in that invaluable register so ably and accurately prepared by a well-known member of this Association.

General Brooks removed in 1866, after the war was ended and the country had become quiet, to Huntsville, Ala., where he resided as a planter till he died, July 19, 1870. He was a kind, amiable gentleman of pleasing manners, and could not but gain friends whether serving as an officer, or living as a citizen among his neighbors. As an officer his career was one of intelligent devotion to his duties, of much arduous service, and of high gallantry in the field. He was one of those who well merited all the distinctions ever conferred upon him. In fine, he was a model gentleman, free from egotism, possessing simplicity of character and gentleness of disposition, with fair abilities and excellent practical common-sense.

Of his class, which graduated fifty-two members, but twenty-four are now living, fourteen having been killed in battle or died of wounds received in action. The class may with propriety feel a little honest pride in its war record.

But while we mourn for those who have so gallantly fallen on the field of honor, let us also drop a tear upon the grave of one who was equally distinguished for courage and good conduct before the enemy, yet escaped the fatal bullet to die peacefully within the quiet circle of home.

(Brevet Major-General Z. B. Tower.)

DAVID H. BUEL,

Died July 22, 1870, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas: Aged 30.

BREVET LIEUTENANT-COLONEL DAVID H. BUEL was born in Michigan, but was appointed from New York a Cadet to the Military Academy, which he entered in 1857, graduating tenth in a class of thirty-four in 1861. Commissioned a Second Lieutenant immediately after graduation, he was ordered to the First Cavalry, and for a few weeks remained on duty in Washington, drilling volunteers. At the battle of Bull Run he took part as acting aide-de-camp to Colonel Howard; and from July to October of 1861, aided in the defence of Washington, being then attached to the Second Dragoons. In November of the same year he was ordered to Watervliet Arsenal, in this State, and remained there till September 10, 1863, during which period he was promoted to First Lieutenant and Captain in the Ordnance Corps. He was then transferred to the Department of the South, but was soon recalled to Washington, where he remained till January, 1864. Captain Buel was next sent to the Department and Army of the Tennessee as Chief of Ordnance. He accompanied Sherman's army in the invasion of Georgia, participated in the battles from Dalton to Atlanta, and was breveted Major for gallant and meritorious conduct in action before the last-named city. He was captured by the Confederates on September 7, but obtained his release on the 28th of the same month, having been a prisoner of war but three weeks. He then rejoined the army, and took prominent part in the campaign from Atlanta to Goldsboro, N. C., receiving a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonelcy for his conduct during the campaign. For two months Colonel Buel superintended the procuring and forwarding of stores to Sherman's army, and after the close of the war he was sent to Northern New York, charged with the duty of receiving arms from disbanded regiments. Ever since, he had been on duty at various points: as ordnance officer at Frankford Arsenal, Pa., at Kennebec Arsenal, Me., and since last fall at Fort Leavenworth.

Colonel Buel was assassinated by a soldier on the evening of July 22, 1870.

He was an officer of great thoroughness and efficiency, and his loss to the Government is very great, while friends inside the army and outside, all over the country, mourn his violent death.

ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK,

No. 177—CLASS OF 1817.

Died August 5, 1870, at Sparta, Ga.: Aged 72.

GENERAL ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK, who was born May 18, 1798, at Vergennes, Vt., died August 5, 1870, at Sparta, Ga., aged 72, and his mortal remains were re-interred December 14, 1871, at West Point, N. Y. His father was Samuel Hitchcock, one of the Circuit Judges of the United States under the Administration of President Washington, and his mother was a daughter of the celebrated General Ethan Allen, whose name, general appearance, and many marked characteristics were inherited by the grandson from the old hero of Ticonderoga and Crown Point.

At the age of sixteen he became a Cadet at the United States Military Academy, from which he was graduated and promoted in the army to be Third Lieutenant in the Corps of Artillery. Advancement in the Infantry being more rapid, he, on his own application, was transferred to its Eighth Regiment, February 13, 1818, as a Second Lieutenant, and became First Lieutenant, October 31, 1818. After serving at Mobile and New Orleans in this regiment till June 1, 1819, he became and continued as its Adjutant till the reorganization of the army, June 1, 1821, when he was transferred to the First Infantry, in which he was subsequently promoted Captain, December 31, 1824. Till 1829, except for three years as Assistant Instructor of Infantry Tactics at West Point, he was employed on recruiting and garrison duty, after which he became Commandant of Cadets at the Military Academy, where his soldierly qualities and marked intelligence were most conspicuous. Upon being relieved from this responsible position, June 24, 1833, he went to Fort Crawford, Wis., and continued on frontier duty till the outbreak of the Florida War, for which, following his military instinct, he at once volunteered. He immediately became Acting Inspector-General in "Gaines's Campaign of 1836" against the Seminole Indians, which terminated after a few skirmishes at Camp Izard, not far from the battle-field of "Dade's Massacre," so graphically described in Hitchcock's report of this heroic struggle, written on the spot. This campaign was one of the many blunders of that unfortunate war, the responsibility for which led to so many after-criminations and recriminations among our commanding officers, and finally to a court of inquiry. Before this court Hitchcock testified that the continuance of the war was in no small degree due to the want of concert between the rival generals—Scott and Gaines—which testimony was perhaps the incipient cause of General Scott's unfriendliness to Hitchcock.

In 1833 the appointment of Governor of Liberia had been tendered to Hitchcock by the American Colonization Society, which was then, and on its renewal in 1837, declined.

From Florida, Hitchcock returned with General Gaines to the Western Department, from which he was transferred to recruiting service, and subsequently, March 2, 1837, to Indian duty. His services as disbursing agent to the ignorant savages of the Northwest Territory were invaluable and marked by the inflexible justice and unflinching firmness characteristic of the performance of all his public duties. Rigidly adhering to the strict interpretation of his instructions and resolutely determined to do right, he saved those wild children of the forest a large portion of their annuities which they had ignorantly assigned to those whose wicked intent was to deceive and swindle them; but while protecting the weak by this firm, honest, and humane course, he himself incurred the bitter enmity of these men who subsequently rose to influence. However, it was enough that in his own heart was crystal purity, that his conscience was void of offence, and that all his proceedings met the cordial approval of the upright Poinsett, then Secretary of War, by whom he was highly complimented, and who, as a reward for his good deeds, had appointed him, July 8, 1838, a Major in the newly-created Eighth Infantry. Though relieved from this service December 31, 1839, and for the succeeding two years doing garrison duty, he was placed, September 29, 1841, by Secretary John Bell, who highly appreciated the sterling merits and administrative abilities of Hitchcock, in charge of the Indian Bureau, then under the War Department. For near a year he continued in this important trust, exposing frauds and discharging unworthy agents, despite the unworthy influences brought against him.

Leaving Washington, he joined his regiment in Florida, from which he removed, in 1842-3, Pascofa's band of hostile Indians. Thence he was transferred to the Western frontier, where he remained till 1845, in the meantime, January 31, 1842, having been promoted Lieutenant-Colonel of the Third Infantry, the command of which soon devolved upon him, and took him back to Florida. Though stationed amid pine barrens, under his careful instruction and guided by his scholarly influence the Third became the crack regiment of infantry, not only in drill and discipline, but in high mental culture. Upon the transfer of the regiment in April, 1843, to Jefferson Barracks, Hitchcock, though a laborious student and prolific writer, never for a moment neglected the care of his regiment. For the first time after the war of 1812-15, mainly through his efforts, there were "evolutions of the line" at Jefferson Barracks, creating the greatest interest in military exercises and duties, and producing between the Third and Fourth Infantry, there in garrison, a spirit of generous rivalry in all that pertained to the career of arms. Under Hitchcock's influence this post was, in fact, a school of application for officers in their higher duties, who became proud of belonging to the military profession.

With his fine regiment, Hitchcock went, in 1844, to Fort Jesup on the Louisiana frontier, pending the negotiation which resulted in the annexation of Texas; and in 1845 joined the Army of Occupation under General Taylor, taking post at Corpus Christi. Even here Hitchcock never relaxed his studies and devotion to his regiment, and found time to write his masterly paper on "Brevet and Staff Rank and Command," sent with the signatures of many officers as a petition to Congress. From Corpus Christi his regiment proceeded to the Rio Grande, but at the close of the march Hitchcock's failing health compelled him to ask for a sick leave of absence.

In January, 1847, having somewhat recovered his strength, Hitchcock repaired to the mouth of the Rio Grande to assume command of his regiment, which was to join in the coming campaign for which General Scott was organizing at Brazos Santiago preparatory to a descent on Vera Cruz. At this time a bitter feud existed between Scott and Hitchcock, the incipency of which has been noted. This had been increased by transactions growing out of the latter's service under Colonel Worth when Major of the Eighth Infantry, and was still more intensified by the part taken by him in connection with the "Buell Court Martial," when, though not of the court, he wrote for its members a severe protest denying General Scott's right to revive a dissolved tribunal to try Buell a second time. Between ordinary men this long-nursed wrath would have continued to rankle and gather strength, but fortunately both these excellent officers had the magnanimity to sacrifice self to country, and contend not with each other but against the common enemy. This reconciliation was effected in the following manner: On his way to join his regiment, Hitchcock, being near the headquarters of General Scott, was invited to call upon the latter. He was cordially received, the hatchet buried, patriotism became paramount, and with restored harmony he was tendered the important appointment of Inspector-General, in which Scott stated "he could be of greater service to the army and his country than in any other position." Many worthy officers have denounced Hitchcock for giving up the command of his splendid regiment for a staff office, forgetting that it was for his commanding general to decide the field of his subordinate's greatest usefulness in the pending struggle. For his cheerful and prompt obedience to Scott's virtual order, Hitchcock is, under the circumstances, entitled to the highest meed of praise instead of bearing the stigma of unmerited reproach.

In the great campaign which eventuated in the occupation of the Halls of the Montezumas, a large acquisition of valuable territory and an honorable peace, Hitchcock maintained the most cordial relations with his commanding general, and performed with consummate ability the delicate and important duties, both civil and military, which devolved upon him. Though his staff position did not attract outside attention and glitter with all the pomp and circumstance of glorious war, it certainly was highly honorable, of manifold usefulness, and largely contributed to the attainment of the great objects of the campaign, manifestly more largely than had he remained at the head of his regiment. In his well-written letters, published at the time, he triumphantly vindicated himself, both as a soldier and a patriot, and conclusively proved that while his regiment was successfully led by a captain, he had performed much more difficult and valuable service. At all events it was not his to choose his functions to the performance of which his commanding general could not have invited him to the compromise of his honor, nor could his chief be derelict to any demands of the army whose achievements were to be his own greatest glory, and destined to illumine one of the brightest pages of our wondrous history. Scott's high consideration and warm friendship, manifested ever after for Hitchcock, are sufficient proofs of his appreciation of the wise counsels, zealous co-operation, and efficient efforts of his distinguished Inspector-General, who for his services received the brevets of Colonel and Brigadier-General.

After the Mexican war, his health being much impaired by incessant labor, Hitchcock sought rest and recreation in an extended journey in Europe and the East, returning home in 1850, replete with mystic lore, the bright memories of scenic and artistic beauty, and much intellectual wealth gained from every treasure-trove which could not be veiled from his scrutinizing search.

After his return he was placed on detached service at Washington, promoted Colonel of the Second Infantry April 15, 1851, and then ordered to San Francisco, Cal., where he established his headquarters from July 9, 1851, to May 21, 1854, while in command of the Military Division of the Pacific. Here, in our newly-acquired possessions, he managed army affairs with consummate skill, protected the numerous Indian tribes from plundering politicians and reckless adventurers, and promptly broke up Walker's filibustering expedition by the seizure of the brig Arrow, prepared to transport a considerable force with arms to Guyamas for the purpose of inducing the inhabitants of Sonora to declare their independence and set up a new government; the government contemplated being in fact already organized in San Francisco. Prominent plotters in California, who subsequently proved disloyal to the United States, not only advocated this outrage upon a sister State, but publicly denounced all interference with their unprincipled schemes. Destitute of patriotism and regardless of consequences, these greedy vultures, who had already batted upon every government appropriation, designed to seize Sonora, make war upon Mexico, and finally secure sufficient territory for the establishment of a Southern slavery republic. The conspirators had even ventured to boldly ventilate their views at a public dinner in San Francisco, and had made efforts to have a law enacted authorizing the organization of a regiment to protect the southern border of California from raids, to which it was about as much exposed as to an inroad from the Fejee Islanders. The real design was, of course, to make the State authority play the wolf part to the Sonora lamb. That this foul disgrace was not consummated is mainly due to Hitchcock's quick perceptions, sound judgment, firm attitude, and honest purposes. But though the blow was warded off, he, who had kept the nation's escutcheon untarnished, became himself the victim of those whose wicked purpose he had so boldly thwarted. The plotters of treason who had failed in their design, soon wreaked their vengeance through the then secessionist Secretary of War, by ostracizing this loyal soldier from his high command to a nominal one at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

Hitchcock having for several years been threatened with paralysis, from which he had sought relief at Wiesbaden, Germany, and at the Arkansas Hot Springs, and with nothing to do in his new place of banishment, asked and obtained a leave of four months from the General-in-Chief. Secretary Davis, who disliked Hitchcock for reasons which it is unnecessary here to specify, demanded, July 12, 1855, of General Scott why he had granted this indulgence, which led to an angry controversy between these high officials, subsequently published in a Senate document. This eventuated in a peremptory order from the Secretary of War directing Hitchcock to go to Fort Pierre, some distance from the scene of hostilities of Harney's Indian expedition of 1855, in which his regiment was engaged. Knowing that the order was not dictated by any necessity for his services but for the gratification of personal spite, Hitchcock asked for an extension of his leave of absence, and, in the event of its not being granted, tendered his resignation, expressly stating, however, that if his services were deemed indispensable he, though still a decided invalid, would go to Fort Pierre at all hazards, "as nothing would be further from his purpose than to jeopardize a reputation which had continued unblemished during a period of nearly forty years in the army." The Secretary accepted Hitchcock's resignation October 18, 1855, having already refused his extension of leave of absence. Thus, as stated by General Scott, was a most meritorious officer forced out of service by the Secretary's oppressive orders in denying a simple indulgence at a time when there was no urgent reason for his presence at a remote post.

After his resignation Hitchcock made St. Louis his home, where he devoted himself to general literature and the peculiar philosophical investigations which had for years occupied his thoughts. All his life he had been a student, whether revelling in fine libraries at West Point and Washington, or delving among his own choice volumes ever his companions whether among the everglades of Florida or the wilds of the Western frontier. Of books he never had enough, and would spend his last penny to possess them. With Spinoza, Plato, and the Neo-Platonists he first became familiar, then was much interested in Swedenborg's works and "Rosetti's Anti-Papal Spirit," and finally went into an elaborate course of reading of Dante, Petrarch, Boccaccio, Chaucer, Spenser, etc. In many of these writings he discovered a double sense—one for the general reader and the other for the members of a society, possessed of the key of interpretation, which ramified all over Europe, and had an existence as far back at least as A.D. 1000. This society was composed of the most learned and scientific men, whose intelligence was in advance of the world, enabling them to see the errors of the Roman Church, which, however, by its power, controlled and restrained these men from the free expression of their opinions. In consequence of this the literary men of those ages avoided persecution, imprisonment, and death, by the use of a conventional language, the exoteric or outward import of which appeared friendly to the party in power, while its esoteric or secret meaning was in direct hostility to the Church, and clearly understood to be so by the initiated. To point out to his friends the extraordinary evidence of this symbolism gave Hitchcock the greatest gratification, and many fragments which he then wrote on these curious and interesting discoveries were subsequently developed in his after published works. From these favorite themes he was diverted for a time by the war with Mexico. There, however, on subjects pertaining to his civil and military duties, his active mind and restless pen were ever at work, and those who suffered from the shafts of his keen invective will not soon forget some of his masterly papers growing out of the controversies of that period. Even amid the intense excitements of California, when gold and speculation absorbed all thought, Hitchcock pursued his peculiar studies and acute investigations with unabated activity and relish, never however abstracting a moment from the efficient administration of his important military command. His fondness for original researches and metaphysical subtleties was very great, but his high sense of official obligation was still greater—in him the scholar never deteriorated the soldier.

The result of his studies of the "Problem of Life" is given in his eight published volumes, which, though not much read by this busy money-making world, have made their lodgment in the ethical mind of the age, and are yet destined to be more more fully appreciated by coming philosophical thinkers. Of these works only a synopsis showing their general scope can be here given.

"The Doctrines of Spinoza and Swedenborg Identified, in so far as they claim a Scientific ground," published in 1846. Hitchcock had been a careful student of Spinoza, and was well versed in the writings of Swedenborg, neither of whom he assails or defends while pointing out some very remarkable resemblances between them. He quotes largely from both, showing almost an identity in their doctrines and principles, especially of God, of knowledge, and of salvation; yet, strange to say, the Swedish philosopher, who borrows without credit much of his ethics from the anathematized Jew, has been held up by many good men as expressly illuminated for the teaching of the true Christian religion and for founding the Church of the New Jerusalem, while his theological prototype has been reviled as the veriest atheist the world has produced. In a private letter to Hitchcock of December 25, 1846, Theodore Parker says of this parallel: "I have long been aware of a certain union in their ideas of God, and of his immanency in matter and spirit; only I thought Spinoza perhaps the more rational of the two in that matter, though I think both make the world a sort of Dutch clock. I never thought the similarity extended as far as you have shown it does. Henry Heine, the wittiest and wickedest of modern writers, says that many a philosopher when walking in a deep forest of thought has fancied he was treading new ground, original and all alone, when suddenly he has found himself confronted face to face with the awful features of Benedict Spinoza! I think you have shown that Swedenborg must have had Spinoza upon his mind when he wrote. It is impossible that Emanuel should have omitted to read Benedict, for he read everything and revelled in the mystics, old, middle-aged, and modern. I like your view of Swedenborg. He was a great man, and is made ridiculous when men worship him and stop not at his limitation. I reverence his genius most profoundly, as I do that of Spinoza, though I worship neither. . . . I hope justice will be done at length to both Spinoza and Swedenborg, and I thank you for writing this little tract to show this agreement in their Scientificals."

Hitchcock's "Remarks upon Alchemy and the Alchemists" was published in 1857. The object of this work was not to describe gray-bearded, shrivelled-up necromancers in sooty cells with retorts and musty manuscripts seeking the phantom of gold in transmuting crucibles, nor to trace from its Arabic paternity the wonderful developments of chemistry and medicine. In the deep study of this cabalistic literature he found, though many had devoted the energies of a life to the passionate pursuit of a chimera, other noble men had discovered a precious jewel in the head of this ugly monster—the real Philosopher's Stone, which was Spiritual Truth ; that these latter were sincere moral reformers not seeking an elixir to convert the baser into purer metals, but that purifying influence converting the earthly dross of mortal existence into immortal wisdom ; and that in an age of persecution were veiled under the paraphernalia of this jugglery the occult symbols of things they dared not utter in common speech. Among hundreds of true Hermetic writers he had studied, he found that KNOW THYSELF was the real object of Alchemy, MAN's transformation from a state of nature to a state of grace being symbolized under the figure of the transmutation of metals ; that astrolabes and alembics, elixirs and essences, lilies and lions, were but the infinitely varied expressions of the sublimer verities of the soul of man made in the image of God ; and that the true nature of Hermetic was Moral Philosophy, and the real Philosopher's Stone was Truth ; hence his attempt to rescue from undeserved opprobrium the reputation of a class of extraordinary thinkers in past ages.

“Swedenborg, a Hermetic Philosopher,” published in 1858, was the natural sequence of “Alchemy and the Alchemists.” Hitchcock had pondered much upon the writings of one of Sweden's profoundest thinkers and distinguished scholars. He truly appreciated the harmonious mind and devotional spirit of one whose maxims of life were so like his own—Often to read and meditate on the Word of God ; to submit everything to the will of Divine Providence ; to observe a propriety of behavior, and always to keep the conscience clear ; and to discharge with fidelity the functions of his employments and the duties of his office, and to render himself in all things useful to society. In Emanuel Swedenborg he soon discovered not a modern Midas, avaricious of that earthly dross that “solder'st impossibilities and maketh them kiss,” but of that spiritual treasure richer than rubies or than fine gold ; not a seeker of ephemeral pleasure good for a day, but that permanent beatitude enduring for all time ; and one in whose symbolical utterances, embalmed in mysterious wrappings, were celestial thoughts upon the human soul and its capacity for knowledge, for happiness, and for immortality. With Hitchcock's habit of looking beyond the letter in the interpretation of occult and mystical writings he was quick to detect in the perusal of Swedenborg's “Heavenly Arcana” many remarkable coincidences with the allegorical language of the alchemists, and formed a decided opinion, fortified by abundant quotations and arguments, that the writings of the learned Swedish moralist were to be judged and interpreted from the standpoint of Hermetic Philosophy.

“Christ the Spirit : being an Attempt to State the Primitive View of Christianity,” was first published in 1860 and enlarged in 1861. The object of the work is to show that the Gospels are not biographies of a living person, but symbolical books written before the beginning of our era by members of a secret society of Jews, the Essenes, who lived in the wilderness bordering the Dead Sea, whose ethical principles and religious observances had the essential features of the New Testament teachings—love of God, love of Virtue, love of Man. That Christ is the personified spirit of the Hebrew Sacred Law ; he is the heart of the Bible in a figure which in after time assumed a carnal existence ; he is the interior Word, represented under various phases as moving among men but who were not his historic disciples. This is perhaps the most profound of all of Hitchcock's writings, but, as its views are not in accord with generally received doctrines, the work has been subject to much intolerant criticism, and its author misrepresented as an infidel because he assumes the mythical character of the miraculous portions of the New Testament in saying that, “If we accept the miracles as historic realities, we must refuse the idea of law altogether, and must admit that there is no truth in the doctrine which affirms an order in the course of nature ; we must then deny the possibility of science in all its branches ; and this must be extended to logic and reasoning, for these depend upon the permanent operation of our faculties ; and then we must hold our hands and receive everything as equally possible in both nature and intellect." Then again in conscious rectitude he adds : "Man loves truth instinctively and hates falsehood. Give him truth, indeed, and if he understands it, he will drink it as the water of life. Error is only acceptable when it wears the face of truth. A reputed infidelity turns out almost always to be a protest against a real or an apparent falsehood. For truth is an eternal virgin, and the first love of all mankind, the first-born among many brethren. To wander from it is to love, that is, to worship some mistaken image or shadow of it ; and this it is that leads man into the wilderness, through and out of which, however, every man carries with him a Moses, a Joshua, a Jesus—a word in the heart, an angel, a prophet—through whom the pure wine of truth may be brought to that soul which hungers and thirsts after righteousness." Hitchcock's book portrays not a Christ of flesh and blood, but that Spirit Christ dwelling in all men who are true sons of God ; the Spirit of Virtue seeking all goodness and purity ; the Spirit of Conscience acting justly and doing no evil ; the Spirit of the Heart imbued with faith, hope and charity ; and the Spirit of the Soul communing with the Infinite and obedient to His will. This hypothesis may strip off the historic robe of Christ the Son of Mary, yet there remains the heavenly halo of the Spirit Christ which has dwelt in humanity from the foundation of the world. In the words of an eminent divine we can say : "The book is remarkable for the spiritual, we may almost say the mystical, character of its thought, for the serenity of its view, the purity of its speculation, the unceasing boldness and unaffected loftiness which we are apt to regard as the solitary student's peculiarity, which we find it difficult to associate with the military habit of mind. It is remarkable again, and still more remarkable for the lovely temper in which it is written. A sweeter moral atmosphere we never breathed than pervades every paragraph of the two volumes. There is no harshness, there is no intolerance, there is no aggression, there is no disagreeable dogmatism, no assumption of superior wisdom. Its charity is perfect, for there is no air of charitableness about it ; it is the goodwill of an honest, believing, and gentle mind. We can scarcely think of a theologian, living or dead, who might not with profit sit at the feet of this brave soldier, and listen to him as he talks about religion."

"The Red Book of Appin," published in 1863, is a Story of the Middle Ages, to which Hitchcock subsequently added other Fairy Tales, with his explanation of their Hermetic Mysticism. These stories he maintains are not mere fantastic fictions addressed to the capacity of childhood, but, interpreted with the key of truth, will be found to be mediæval writings covered with the dust of allegory beneath which are hidden treasures, concealed wisdom, and precious verities ; that these seeming products of an unregulated imagination have, like parables, a most rich and valuable meaning ; and that we should bear in mind the declaration of Solomon : "A wise man will hear and will increase learning, and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise councils," so as "to understand a proverb and the interpretation—the words of the wise and their dark sayings."

"Remarks on the Sonnets of Shakespeare," published in 1865, and enlarged in 1867. These exquisitely beautiful and most wonderful sonnets, Hitchcock maintains, belong to the class of Hermetic writings, carrying one sense to the eye and ear, but another for the head and for the heart ; that they were not addressed to a person—"the muddy vesture of decay"—but that, "Beauty's Rose" was a synonym of Religion—the Divine Beauty existing in the soul of Humanity ; and that Nature, as double Spirit and Matter, was the "master-mistress" of the poet's passion. He regards the sonnets as containing the abstract doctrines and higher spirit of Shakespeare, developed under the most intense contemplations of life ; and that, in symbolic form, the poet has inclosed in them what were to him eternal principles—"the true sources of artistic births." And he holds that the object of the sonnets was to show that the Spirit of Man is one with the Spirit of Nature, and that a sense of this unity was the secret joy of the poet taking the name of Love, though the "deep substance of the flesh," at times, would "steal sweet hours from love's delight."

"Colin Clouts Explained," published in 1865. Hitchcock affirms that Spenser's object was not, as generally supposed, to give an account of his return to England and the poet's presentation to Queen Elizabeth and her court. That the poem had a higher purport. First, as signifying a mental journey by the poet himself, religiously illuminated, visiting the spiritual world—the Arcadia of the ancient poets debarred to ordinary mortals—where he meets the mystic Queen of the ideal realm (not the vixen Queen of England) for whom he entertains that passionate devotion to some figurative beauty and perfection, cloaked under the name of Love by a long succession of spirituelle poets, but which in reality is the Divine Love. Secondly, that by "Colin Clouts Come Home Again" is to be understood his coming down to ordinary life to give us a poet's description of what he saw in the spiritual world, using this expression metaphorically: for the eye hath not seen nor hath the ear heard what is done in the Arcadian Land, where "men immortally live, following all delights and pleasures," and which is governed by a Queen so beautiful that all the country round is rendered shining "with one single beam of her great beauty." Finally, that Spenser in this Hermetic poem has presented his view of a Christian Life—the life of a man under the guidance of the Gospel Spirit of Truth, the rewards of which are the glowing pictures in the poet's land of Cynthia and its Queen.

Hitchcock considers Spenser's Sonnets, and the minor poems of Drayton, Sidney, Chaucer, Carew, etc., as Hermetic writings inclosing the speculative opinions of their authors upon deeply-meditated studies of Nature and the profoundest problems of life.

"Notes on the Vita Nuova and Minor Poems of Dante," published in 1866. This is a curious work of no small learning, but we have dwelt so much upon the preceding volumes that, in this already too extended notice, we must briefly pass it over. Hitchcock considers it also as one of the mysterious books thrown out upon the world in a mystic style of writing, so obscure that many of Dante's most intimate friends were unable to penetrate his meaning. To explain the Commedia and this its manifest introduction, the poet himself was induced to furnish a commentary in a mystical volume, entitled the "Convito, or Banquet," which, however, only lifts the veil. Hitchcock in his Notes endeavors to show the spiritual character of the Vita Nuova, and that Beatrice, the bright central figure of the poem, was not an earthly mistress thrilling his heart and guiding his soul, but was a celestial vision of a radiant angel—Heavenly Wisdom personified.

Our space will not permit even an enumeration of Hitchcock's many fugitive articles, controversial papers, critical notices, biographical sketches, official reports, and well-digested letters, which do credit alike to his head and heart.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, Hitchcock was a resident of St. Louis, and though much absorbed in mystic studies, saw clearly the march of passing events. Missouri, then a slave State, was intensely agitated, and many of her prominent citizens had espoused secession sentiments; Governor Jackson had refused compliance with the Government's requisition for his State's quota of troops, characterizing it as "illegal, unconstitutional, revolutionary, and diabolical;" and the seizure of Camp Jackson was followed by the immediate passage by the Legislature of the "Military Bill." Hitchcock, born in the loyal atmosphere of the Green Mountains, educated as a soldier of the Republic, and who, for half a century, had seen the stars and stripes protecting our frontiers, guarding our coasts, leading us on to victory, and commanding the respect of the world, quickly decided upon his course. Come what might, he would not forsake that revered emblem of nationality which had floated over the Alma Mater of his youth, which had proudly streamed from the capital of the Montezumas in his manhood, and which had shielded his authority on the far-off Pacific in his later years. With him the doctrine of secession was destructive of all government and led to universal anarchy, therefore did he firmly resolve to devote himself to the maintenance of the Union and the perpetuation of its countless blessings to posterity.

Imbued with these noble sentiments he repaired to Washington to tender his services to the Government, though his health was so feeble that hemorrhage prevented his leaving his room for several days after his arrival. At once General Scott urged the bestowal of a high commission upon this meritorious soldier, but the request was refused by the Secretary of War, and Hitchcock returned to St. Louis. Here he promptly gave his talents to the Union cause, particularly as the adviser of General Harney, who resumed command of the military Department of the Missouri, September 15, 1861, and, on the same day, issued a stirring proclamation, of which Hitchcock was the probable author. This proclamation denounced the Legislature's "Military Bill" as "an indirect secession ordinance," which, being in its material provisions manifestly in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, could not and ought not to be upheld or regarded by the good people of Missouri, who were warned that the whole power of the Government would be exerted, if necessary, to retain the State, which "must share the destiny of the Union."

When General Halleck assumed command, November 18, 1861, of the Department of Missouri, he appreciated the importance of securing the more active services of Hitchcock, hence he and prominent members of his staff renewed the request for the bestowal of a high commission. This met a hearty response from General Scott, who says in a letter of February 18, 1862: "I early wrote to Mr. Stanton to recall Hitchcock's merits, and to say that personal hostility had prevented his re-appointment to the army, as it had been the personal hostility of another Secretary of War that drove him from the service in 1855. The result of these efforts, unknown to Hitchcock, was his appointment and confirmation as Major-General U. S. Volunteers, February 10, 1862. This deserved compliment he, in an admirable letter, declined on account of impaired health, which would not permit him to perform the responsible duties of a Major-General, and concludes with the utterance of strong Union sentiments, an ardent desire for the speedy overthrow of the Rebellion, and an early re-establishment of the Federal authority. Subsequently he was induced to retain his commission and go on duty in the War Department, where he rendered those signal services for which, from his culture, zeal, and firmness, he was admirably fitted. He soon won by his sagacity and talents the confidence of the Secretary of War, and by his purity of character the affections of the President, with both whom he was in constant consultation upon the policy and movements of the war. To his confidential position of military adviser was added, November 15, 1862, the delicate duties of Commissioner for the Exchange of Prisoners of War, which required consummate tact, unerring judgment, and prompt decision. How these rare qualities were exhibited are best attested by his extensive and masterly correspondence with the rebel authorities. In addition to these onerous duties, those of Commissary-General of Prisoners devolved upon him November 3, 1865, which materially increased his labors in closing up the voluminous records of the office and the adjustment of complicated claims. Such was the high value of his assistance to the War Department in the performance of his multiplied vocations that he was retained till October 1, 1867, when he was among the very last mustered out of service.

Late in life he had married, and for the benefit of his health sought with his wife a more congenial clime in the sunny South, where he died full of years, after a well-spent life, rich in honors, and crowned with an amaranthine wreath entwined with the flowers of Fidelity, Justice, and Truth.

Hitchcock, while inheriting much of the personal appearance and military determination of his noted grandfather, possessed many of those sterling attributes so becoming the ermine of his father's judicial robes. As a soldier of the Republic for near half a century, he was noted as an accomplished officer, professionally well informed, a skilful tactitian, able in administration, a rigid disciplinarian, just as a commander, kind and genial to his comrades, and persistent in usefulness manifested in his high sphere of duty during two great wars. Whatever his position he conscientiously discharged the functions of his office, whether instructing and governing Cadets at West Point ; giving attention to the drills and discipline of his regiment in the barrans of Florida ; teaching system and grand tactics at Jefferson Barracks ; protecting the wild savage on the frontier ; crushing lawlessness in his Pacific command ; or winning by zeal and intelligence the confidence of his chiefs, both in Mexico and at the Capital. As a scholar, without being classically educated, he became eminent for his erudition in ancient, mediæval, and modern literature. He revelled in choice libraries, possessed a curious collection of rare volumes, and never was satiated with books. Though his mind had a strong legal bias and exhibited considerable mathematical power, his passionate fondness for metaphysical researches and philosophical disquisitions led him into many original and strange investigations. When he had made of them a careful study, his conclusions were clear and precise ; but such was the integrity of his mind that he was ever open to conviction, never obstinately dogmatic, and always sought for further light till his judgment became so fixed that it could not be shaken except by irresistible logic or an overwhelming array of facts. His love of study infused its influence to his whole command, his young officers being as noted for scholarly culture as for soldierly superiority. As a writer his style was remarkable for its clearness, force, and precision ; his pen adorned all it touched, and against an adversary's sophistry was sharper than a two-edged sword ; and his remarkable versatility, eloquence of reason, skill in dialectics, philosophical analysis, subtlety of spiritual perception, and vigor of thought, challenged our highest admiration. With playful grace he unaffectedly discourses of fairy tales ; with metaphysical subtlety probes the occult for its hidden significance ; with glowing fervor interprets the sublimest productions of poetic genius ; and with humble reverence searches the secrets of the soul of man and his relations to God. He was no sectarian, nor could he be shackled with Procrustean articles of faith. Though he may have doubted the history of JESUS THE NAZARENE of tribal lineage, a human being localized in Judea with temporal connections, and an existence embalmed in gospel biographies and imprisoned in creeds and liturgies, he devoutly acknowledged the SPIRIT CHRIST, the living Emanuel born in us, the speaking witness of the Divine in our hearts, and the distilled essence of all those pure desires, earnest purposes, noble resolutions, holy aspirations, and moral obligations symbolized by Christianity. His own guileless life following the guidance of the Gospel Spirit of Truth, is the best interpreter of his doctrines. As a man his modest impressive manners inspired confidence and respect. In contrast to his almost childlike simplicity and womanly tenderness was a Roman's resolution and the martyr's devotion to principle ; and interwoven with the quick intelligence, mental dignity, and love of the ideal and spiritual pertaining to his student life, were refined tastes, a delicate susceptibility of beauty, and a passionate fondness for the concord of sweet harmonies, being himself an excellent musician. With these rare traits of character were combined the finest impulses, and his heart, rebounding with generous emotion, would, while denying all luxuries to himself, lavishly bestow of his means to the needy, saving by his frugality what was secretly spent for the maintenance of the poor and education of the young. His sympathy with the interests and regard for the feelings and welfare of those around him were equal to his charity, hence he was almost idolized by those who were the recipients of his bounty and knew the purity and beauty of his nature. He was also the centre of a wide circle, embracing the good, the cultivated, and the eminent, upon whom his death fell with the solemn pathos of a deep calamity—

“ 'Cause he was wise, and gallant things designed
And pondered noble projects in his mind.”

JAMES MONROE,

No. 131—CLASS OF 1815.

Died September 7, 1870, at Orange Mountain, N. J.: Aged 71.

COLONEL JAMES MONROE, who was born September 10, 1799, in Albemarle county, Virginia, died September 7, 1870, at the residence, on Orange Mountain, N. J., of his only surviving child, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, having nearly completed seventy-one years of an eventful life. He was the nephew of President Monroe, who was a younger brother of his father, Andrew Monroe. They were descended from Captain Monroe, an officer in the army of Charles the First, who emigrated with the Cavaliers to Virginia in 1652.

Colonel Monroe, after receiving a good preliminary education, entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., when scarce fourteen years old, and was graduated at that institution, March 2, 1815. Of his classmates of 1815 but six survive him—Henry Middleton, of South Carolina; Simon Willard, a retired merchant of Boston; Generals Thomas J. Leslie and Benjamin L. E. Bonneville, of the U. S. Army; General Samuel Cooper; and Professor Charles Davies. Upon his graduation he became Third Lieutenant in the Corps of Artillery; was promoted Second Lieutenant, May 2, 1817, and First Lieutenant, December 31, 1818, retaining the same rank in the Fourth Artillery in the reorganization of the Army, June 1, 1821; was brevetted a Captain, December 31, 1828, "for faithful service ten years in one grade;" and resigned his commission in the Army, September 30, 1832.

On the very day—March 2, 1815—of Colonel Monroe's graduation, our war with Great Britain having just terminated, Congress passed an act authorizing hostilities against Algiers, that piratical power having for some time before been engaged in depredations upon the little American commerce that remained in or near the Mediterranean.

On May 20 a squadron, consisting of three frigates, one sloop-of-war, and six brigs and schooners, sailed from New York for the Mediterranean, under Commodore Decatur's command, the Guerriere, 44, being his flagship. On board of this latter vessel was embarked Brevet Major S. B. Archer's company of U. S. Artillery, Lieutenant Monroe being one of its subaltern officers. On June 17, 1815, when off Cape de Gata, on the southern coast of Spain, Decatur's squadron fell in with and captured the Algerine frigate Mashouda, 46, after a short running fight, in which the Algerine admiral and nearly one hundred of his officers and men were killed and wounded, and four hundred and six made prisoners. In this spirited engagement Lieutenant Monroe directed a part of the quarter-deck guns of the Guerriere, and was wounded in the right hand while himself firing one of the pieces, which disabled several of his fingers for life. His physical bravery, here tested, was no less a marked characteristic of his after career than his ever conspicuous moral courage first exhibited on this cruise. Having challenged a young naval officer, the meeting took place the next morning on the coast of Spain; but, instead of proceeding to blow out each other's brains, an apology was made to Monroe, who instantly, with the true chivalry of his nature, said to his antagonist that he had but anticipated his own intention in making the amende honorable. Quick to resent an affront, and ever ready to meet the responsibility of his own words and acts, this was the only occasion on which he appeared as a principal on the field, though, as second or friend, he settled no less than eighteen contemplated duels, some quite noted in our annals.

After his return to the United States, he served as Battalion Adjutant of artillery at New Orleans, December 28, 1816, to December 18, 1817; as aide-de-camp to Brevet Major-General Winfield Scott, December 18, 1817, to April 4, 1822; on ordnance, garrison, and commissary duty at various posts for the next ten years; and again became aide-de-camp to General Scott, June 22 to July 13, 1832, on the Black Hawk expedition, but did not reach the seat of war, he being taken sick at Chicago, where a large proportion of the troops were prostrated with Asiatic cholera.

After leaving the Army, he entered political life at the solicitation of numerous friends who appreciated his clear intellect and high character. His first service was as Assistant Alderman in 1832-3, and Alderman in 1833-5, of the Third Ward of New York city, being elected in 1834 to be President of the Board, when it was a distinction and proof of integrity to be in the City Council. In 1836, William L. Marcy, then Governor of the State, tendered to him the position of his aide-de-camp, with the rank of Colonel, but it was not accepted. From 1839 to 1841 he was an able and useful member of the U. S. House of Representatives, his colleagues from New York being such men as Ogden Hoffman, Moses H. Grinnell, and Edward Curtis. He was again elected to Congress, November 3, 1846; but his election being contested by his opponent, David S. Jackson, the case was sent back, March 25, 1848, to the people, neither contestant being admitted. Colonel Monroe was re-nominated for the remainder of the term, but declined to run. Subsequently, in 1850 and 1852, he became a distinguished and leading member of the Legislature of New York, his adopted State. In 1852 he was a very active and influential partisan of General Scott, who was the Whig nominee for President of the United States. On this, as on all other occasions, he proved the sincere and ardent friend of his old chief, whom he had faithfully served during his military career, his devotion never ceasing during the declining years of that venerated hero and patriot.

His exemplary wife, to whom, as Miss Elizabeth Mary Douglas, he was married in 1821, having died in 1852, Colonel Monroe abandoned political life, and never after took an active part in city, state, or national affairs, except during part of the session of the Virginia Convention which met February 13, 1861, and after a fierce struggle of months, finally, April 17, 1861, resolved to throw off her allegiance to the United States. On this momentous occasion, Colonel Monroe, true to the memory of a great name so intimately connected with our existence as a nation, and to himself, educated under the flag of that nation, promptly proceeded to Richmond, where his bold heart and eloquent tongue, both in public and private, denounced the treasonable and suicidal act which was about to drench his beloved Virginia in blood. But though his native State took the fatal leap, he, during the long and desolating years of the terrible contest which ensued, never for a moment, in thought or deed, faltered in true loyalty to the Union. Though remaining in civil life, he never after ceased to feel a deep interest in all that affected the welfare of his country and the progress of civil liberty throughout the world.

After losing his wife, much of his time was spent in the Union Club in New York, of which he was one of the earliest members. In the success of the club he took the deepest interest, and ever tried to maintain for it a high social position. It is unnecessary to say how universal was the attachment of all the members, who looked up to the Colonel as the father of the club. His presence ever shed a genial warmth amid the groups of fond friends which clustered around him to listen to his exhaustless store of anecdotes and incidents of the times in which he had lived. In his retentive memory were garnered many of the most precious scraps of the history of the events of our country and countrymen, particularly of the "Monroe family," General Scott, and, in fact, of all the public men—Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Marcy, Crittenden, Hoffman, etc.—with whom he had been intimate in and out of Congress. For hours he would dwell upon the services of his distinguished uncle, detailing the part taken by him in our Revolutionary struggle at White Plains, crossing the Delaware, storming the battery at Trenton, fighting at Brandywine by the side of Lafayette when wounded, as aide-de-camp to Lord Stirling at the battles of Germantown and Monmouth, and his presence at Annapolis when Washington surrendered his commission as Commander-in-Chief; of his services in the Virginia Legislature and Convention, and halls of Congress, with such men as Patrick Henry, George Mason, Madison, Pendleton, Marshall, Grayson, and others; of his enthusiastic reception as Minister to France, when publicly embraced by the President of the National Convention, the stars and stripes being intertwined with the tri-color of the new republic, and his later important agency in the acquisition of Louisiana; of his varied services as Governor of Virginia, Minister to England and Spain, and Secretary of State and temporarily of War during Madison's administration; and as President of the United States, making his northern tour with his Revolutionary blue coat, buff breeches, and cocked hat; or enthusiastically receiving, in 1824, Lafayette, who, from his youthful revolutionary companion, had grown old with the cares of state and the sufferings of a dungeon, shared by his devoted wife, whose life, perhaps, had been rescued from the tigers of the Reign of Terror by the womanly courage of Mrs. Monroe while residing in Paris during her husband's embassy to France. With pride the Colonel would recount the memorable events of his uncle's administration; the admission into the Union of the States of Mississippi, Illinois, and Maine; the acquisition of Florida from Spain; the Missouri Compromise; the recognition of the independence of Mexico and the South American republics; the declaration of the "Monroe doctrine;" the judicious reorganization of the Army; the increase of the Navy; the strengthening of the national defenses; the protection of commerce; the aid to internal improvements; and the vigor and efficiency infused into every department of the public service.

It would require a volume to record Colonel Monroe's numerous anecdotes of General Scott and other distinguished soldiers and statesmen. Suffice it to say in this connection, it was due to Colonel Monroe's energy and devotion that the nation was saved from the disgrace of seeing the conqueror of Mexico superseded by the appointment of Thomas H. Benton as Lieutenant-General, and consequently to command the Army, then triumphantly marching to the Halls of the Montezumas.

Colonel Monroe, in general appearance and character, much resembled his distinguished namesake. Although not a man of brilliant endowments, he possessed a robust intellect, sharpened more by contact with men than the study of books; clear perceptions which penetrated through the outer husk of pretension direct to the inner motives of action; a sagacious judgment, quickly discriminating between true and counterfeit character; and a tenacious memory that profited by everything coming within his keen observation. His manly courage, scrupulous integrity, and earnestness of purpose gave him great strength with his associates; while his genuine truthfulness, scorn of all hypocrisy and sincere appreciation of real worth secured their universal confidence. He never became a petrified humanity wrapped in self, but was a living soul, genially and lovingly in sympathy with his fellows. In the social circle, which was his favorite arena, his courteous manner, modest simplicity, sportive smile, and personal magnetism won all hearts. With his intimate friends he had no reserve, but would tell his stories with the mirthful humor of a boy. This sunshine of temperament, springing from warmth of feeling, never deserted him, even in his declining years or hours of pain. His pleasantry, however, which was the jubilee of a joyous heart, never wounded even the most sensitive by ridicule, satire, or a sneer. He never forgot a kindness or a friend; his benevolence and generosity were only surpassed by his chivalric honor and keen sense of justice; and it might be truly said of him, as was remarked by Jefferson of his uncle, that "if his soul was turned inside out, not a spot would be found upon it."

The writer knew him most intimately during his ebbing years, when life's last sands were low; but

"Though old, he still retain'd

His manly sense and energy of mind.

Virtuous and wise he was, but not severe;

He still remember'd that he once was young :
 His easy presence check'd no decent joy.
 Him even the dissolute admired ; for he
 A graceful looseness, when he pleased, put on,
 And laughing, could instruct."

BRADFORD R. ALDEN,

No. 653—CLASS OF 1831.

Died September 10, 1870, at Newport, R. I.: Aged 59.

COLONEL BRADFORD R. ALDEN was a gentleman whose long association with our Army, as well as his high personal character, demands far more than a passing notice. He was born at Meadville, Pa., graduated at West Point, in 1831, and was an officer of the Fourth U. S. Infantry until he resigned in 1853 ; at that date he was stationed as Captain Fourth Infantry, at Fort Jones, in northern California, with but one small company in his command. In August, 1853, a universal and formidable uprising of the Indians on Rogue River in southern Oregon occurred, and a call for aid was sent to him. He instantly repaired thither, distant two hundred miles and beyond his ordinary sphere of improvisation, with a small detachment of regulars, and immediately called out and raised a battalion of volunteers for the defence of the valley, of which he was elected Colonel. They met the Indians in a stiff battle on the 24th August, 1853, near Jacksonville, Oregon, and he was badly wounded in the shoulder and spine, a wound from which he never fully recovered. The people of that valley always spoke in enthusiastic honor of him, and of his prompt, heroic, and gallant services—services which, we doubt not, saved that beautiful valley from a great calamity.

He had previously served for several years as Aide-de-Camp to General Winfield Scott, and was Commandant of the Corps of Cadets at West Point from 1845 to 1852. Thus large numbers of its graduates can bear witness to the purity and sterling traits of his character. After his resignation he travelled in Europe, repeatedly, for his health. Unable to ride horseback from his wound, and therefore unfitted to share in the civil war, he went in 1861 to the petroleum region in northwestern Pennsylvania, and was fortunate in initiating some of the most successful petroleum enterprises in that region.

Colonel Alden was the son of Major Roger Alden, aide-de-camp to General Washington in the Revolution, who passed upon him the highest encomiums ; and the son certainly inherited like virtues. No man who ever lived possessed more heroic and noble traits of character. Imbued with decided religious principles from his earliest youth, his pure and genial Christian character was ever exhibited in numberless acts of benevolence, many of which were unknown to mortal eyes. Real want and misfortune were ever met by him with sympathy, and he had a heart as big as the rest of the world. Of polished manners and elegant tastes, he was highly accomplished in his knowledge of literature and art ; extensive travel, with an observing mind, made him a charming companion. He has left behind him a pure, spotless fame, illustrating the brightest qualities of the true American gentleman. The only difficulties his friends encounter in writing of his qualities is how to restrain the pen within moderate limits when attempting merely to do bare and simple justice to his memory.

THOMAS J. BRERETON,

No. 1169—CLASS OF 1843.

Died September 18, 1870, at Yonkers, N. Y.: Aged 48.

THOMAS JOHN BRERETON, formerly Captain Ordnance Corps, U. S. Army, entered into rest on Sunday night, 18th September, 1870.

Born 13th August, 1822, he entered West Point in 1839, and was commissioned in the Fourth Artillery in 1843, having graduated third in his class. He was at once transferred to the Ordnance Corps, and assigned to duty at Washington, D. C., whence he was successively transferred, in a short period, to Old Point Comfort and to Watervliet Arsenal.

Soon after commencement of hostilities with Mexico, he was ordered thither, and fought bravely at Palo Alto and Resaca, being upon General Taylor's staff. Active duty in this line being at an end, he was stationed at Camargo until the Declaration of Peace in 1848.

After the war he served at Frankford Arsenal some three years, and was then transferred to Alleghany Arsenal, where he remained five years, the last year in command.

It was at this time that he married Amelia M., daughter of the late Hon. Harmar Denny, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and soon after took command of Mount Vernon Arsenal, Alabama, and was on duty at that Post nearly two years, when he resigned from the Army and entered into private business in Pittsburgh.

This is a brief sketch of the services of a thoroughly good soldier and a most exemplary and high-toned officer, whose whole record was without spot or blemish in a Corps one of the most exacting in the Army in its requirements, professional and personal.

It may be a melancholy pleasure to any old brother officer to glance his eye over these few points, and to refresh many an old memory of past services and past pleasures; but the chief object in furnishing a notice for these columns is to show a later life, whose every day and hour were occupied in the Master's work, giving thereto, with his whole heart and soul, and with a zeal rare among men, all the energies of a mind trained in a thorough school, and working out each day and hour some result to further that Master's cause, as he understood it. Having been born and baptized in the Church, he was confirmed at a special Confirmation, held by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Potter, at Trinity Chapel, the 21st of April, 1861, and made his first Communion the 5th Sunday after Easter, at St. John's Church, Alleghany.

With the unvarying energy with which he embarked in every work of life, he immediately, at every spare moment night and day, gave himself up to a course of reading which might the better fit him for the new duties he had taken upon himself, and he not only added rapidly to a well-stored mind, but, as a prominent clergyman has said, aided incalculably many a Priest and layman who were so fortunate as to know him. He was for some time a Warden of St. John's Church, which he materially assisted in its enlargement and improvement. And then feeling that he was called to do harder work, with the increased illumination which his Blessed Lord had vouchsafed to him, with characteristic perseverance and self-reliance, he determined to organize a new Parish in another section of the city, near his own residence, and among hard-working mechanics, men and women. He leased a large building, and refitted it in a plain and substantial way for the Worship of Almighty God. He made it a free and open Church for all; he gathered together a boy-choir from the elements at hand, and had them instructed in the Plain Song of the Church; and last, and far best of all, he raised an Altar whereat the Holy Eucharist should be fittingly celebrated, weekly at least, and upon all Saints' Days and Festivals.

Aided afterwards by a few friends, he organized the Corporation, and became Senior Warden. The present Rector was fortunately selected by him as the first incumbent of the new Parish, which, first styled St. Luke's Mission, was altered to All Saints' Church.

Captain Brereton now at once took charge of the Sunday School as Superintendent, which he speedily brought into a flourishing condition. Besides these and many another labor, which motives of delicacy render it difficult to mention, he held high office in the Diocese, and in the various societies now so happily increasing among us, in number and usefulness.

He was, at the time of his departure, Vice-President of the American Church Union, Treasurer of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament in this country, and member of the A. P. U. C. and other associations.

His illness was a long and weary one, trying and painful in the extreme; from the first, as long ago as the summer of 1869, he felt and knew he could not recover his health, but his suffering was borne with a steady patience and with a sweetness and gentleness most touching to all who had the privilege of loving and waiting upon him.

By midsummer his disease had assumed such an aggravated form that it was thought desirable to seek additional medical advice in New York, and he came hither accompanied by his family, taking up his residence at Yonkers, on the Hudson, where at the last, surrounded by those nearest to him, and attended by a priest who was also a valued friend, he quietly and peaceably fell asleep in Jesus.

The Funeral Service at St. Paul's Church, Yonkers, consisting of a portion of the Office of the Burial of the Dead, was sung by the Rector, and the Holy Communion was celebrated by the same Priest, who said the Commendatory Prayer at his bedside. The service was choral.

The Committal was said at Mount Auburn Cemetery, near Boston, by the Rectors of St. Mary's, Dorchester (at which Church his remains arrived on St. Matthew's Day, and rested that night in front of the Altar, watched by friends), and of All Saints', Pittsburgh.

Here, nearly all those of his family gone before, all that is mortal of our friend, rest until the General Resurrection at the Last Day. It will be a source of comfort to absent relations and friends to know that in death, as in life, every act that pertained to the last sacred offices in the care of his mortal remains was performed by old and tried friends and fellow-churchmen.

Time and space do not permit the many tributes to his worthiness which it seems to us he so well deserved; but a sketch of this kind, imperfect as it is, would be still more so were there no mention of his warm-hearted and generous hospitality.

His house and purse were open to Clergy and Laity, without stint, and at all times.

Many a wise plan he has helped, many a weary heart comforted, many a want supplied. "His work was a great one: it was well done, and he had finished it."

What shall be said of the translation to Paradise of so good a man, of such an Exemplar of all Christian Virtues?

What shall be said, while acknowledging most fully his gain, of the loss to his wife and family and friends?

God only knows, besides themselves.

May the souls of the Faithful rest in peace. Amen.

Until the outbreak of the Rebellion he served as assistant in the construction of Forts Gaines and Jefferson, Gulf of Mexico. Promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant, he aided in placing Washington in a state of defence, and participated in the Virginia Peninsular campaign. Until August, 1863, he remained in Virginia, having been meanwhile promoted to the rank of Captain. He was next sent to the Department of the South, where he was engaged in the siege of Fort Wagner, and in constructing defences until February, 1864, when he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Army of the Tennessee. He participated in the entire campaign under General Sherman, from Dalton to Atlanta, and thence to Savannah. At the close he was made Brevet Major, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, and Brevet Colonel, December 21, 1864, for gallant and distinguished services during the campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas, ending in the capture of Savannah and the final surrender of General J. E. Johnston. For the part he took in these operations he was made a Brevet Brigadier-General. After the close of the war he was placed on duty as Captain of Engineers, and in 1867 was promoted to Major, which commission he held at the time of his death. He died of yellow fever, at Mobile, Ala.

*(Secretary of the Association.)ROBERT EDMUND LEE,

No. 542—CLASS OF 1829.

Died October 13, 1870, at Lexington, Va.: Aged 64.

GENERAL ROBERT EDMUND LEE was the son of General Henry Lee, of the Revolution.

Born in Virginia, in January, 1807, he grew up with all the advantages of wealth and family position. At the age of seventeen he entered the Military Academy, and was graduated second in the class of 1829, and promoted to be Brevet Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers. His état-de-service shows him constantly employed in various important professional works until the War with Mexico, when he had attained the rank of Captain of Engineers. During this war he received three brevets for gallant and meritorious conduct in battle.

From 1848 to 1853 he was Superintendent of the Military Academy. Near the end of this service he was promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel Second Cavalry, and soon after was ordered to Texas, on frontier duty. He commanded the forces which suppressed "John Brown's raid," at Harper's Ferry, October 17th, 1859. The following spring he took command of the Department of Texas, and was promoted to the Colonelcy of the First Cavalry. He was on leave of absence in 1860 and 1861, and resigned April 25th, 1861, to join in the Rebellion of 1861-66, against the United States.

During the last two years and ten months of the war he was General-in-Chief in command of all the Southern Armies.

On September 28, 1865, he accepted the Presidency of Washington College at Lexington, Va., which position he held until his death, giving the people, to whom he was an exemplar, a lesson of quiet submission to authority, and of peaceful attention to private pursuits. Son of "Light Horse Harry" of Revolutionary fame; inheritor through his wife of the estates and traditions of the Washington family; of dignified presence, affable and yet distant in manner—he was, in all respects, the ideal Virginian.

DANIEL M. BELTZHOOVER,

No. 1342—CLASS OF 1847.

Died November 1, 1870, at Mobile, Ala.: Aged 44.

PROFESSOR DANIEL M. BELTZHOOVER was born a poet and musician, and endowed with talents of the highest order, which had been carefully trained and nurtured in the celebrated Catholic Seminaries in Maryland. He entered West Point in 1843, one of the youngest cadets of his class. Graduating with honor in 1847, he was promoted to the First United States Artillery, and served with his company in Mexico, and afterwards at Forts Columbus and McHenry; also in California and at Key West. He resigned his commission in 1855, and was soon afterwards appointed Professor of Mathematics at Mt. St. Mary's College, at Emmitsburg, Maryland. A most excellent classical and English scholar, and of a rare mathematical and logical turn of mind, he was an exception to the common saying then current at the Point, "that no musician ever graduated with distinction," for it was as a musician, both as a composer and performer, that he was distinguished. While at the Point he composed many pieces, some of which were published. Among them were the "Grey for the Blue," written by the wife of Capt. Fred. A. Smith; the "Farewell to Mrs. General Scott," the words of which were by Cadet B. E. Bee; and the "Graduating Song of 1847," for which Mrs. General Scott herself wrote the words. He also began an Oratorio, which he finished after graduating, and which was performed at the Cathedral at Baltimore. Those who were with him at the Point will recall with pleasure the delightful music furnished by Beltzhoover's Quartette on many occasions. He was also the organist at the Cadet Chapel during his cadetship. He was of a genial and affectionate disposition, with an organization peculiarly nervous and sensitive. He died in November, 1870, in Mobile, Ala., where he had established himself in business.

"Then friends when met in peace or strife,
By one loved word shall be restored
The smiles and joys of early life,
And Alma Mater is that word."

He was then a Captain, having attained that rank in 1846. He was on duty for twelve years, 1832-44, as an assistant Instructor of Mathematics, and Instructor in French and Artillery and Cavalry Tactics, at the Military Academy. Desirous of studying foreign military service, he went to Algeria, in 1845, and served on the staff of Marshal Bugeaud of the French army. He was engaged on the Rio Grande and in mustering Volunteers into service during the first year of the Mexican war.

He was retired from active service "for disability resulting from long and faithful service and from disease and exposure in the line of duty."

Captain Knowlton was author of "Notes on Gunpowder, Cannon, and Projectiles," 1840, and compiler of "Instructions and Regulations for the Militia of the United States," 1867.

ARNOLD ELZEY,

No. 923—CLASS OF 1837.

Died February 21, 1871, at Baltimore, Md.: Aged 54.

GENERAL ELZEY's name appears in the same class with John Sedgwick, Joseph Hooker, and those of many other well-known men. His record shows him a gallant officer, serving through the Florida and Mexican wars with peculiar distinction, and receiving well-earned brevets. At the breaking out of the late civil war, General Elzey resigned and joined in the rebellion against the United States. During the war he was desperately wounded on several occasions, and received high promotion in the Southern army.

After his return to his native State, Maryland, in 1865, he lived quietly until his death, on his farm in Anne Arundel county, near Jessup's Cut.

(Secretary of the Association.)

JOSEPH G. SWIFT,

No. 2142—CLASS OF 1866.

Died March 2, 1871, at New York City: Aged 28.

LIEUTENANT JOSEPH G. SWIFT, grandson and namesake of the first graduate, his life was an honor to the honored name he bore. Loyal, staunch, and true, unswerving in his love for his country and the fair fame of his Alma Mater, "zealous and quick in honor," strong and faithful in friendship, and as faithfully loved and respected by those who knew him, he entered upon his career as an officer full of hope and promise. Yet ere a year had passed away, even his rugged health had met its conqueror. Northern born and bred, he fell a victim to the malaria of his Southern station, and from that time to the day of his early death, drooped visibly under its influence, sinking little by little until the spring set in, and then passed quietly away, following those whom in the old boyish days he had most loved and cherished—classmates who had gone before; and now, with DIXON and TRACY LEE, he is mourned and remembered as he mourned for and remembered them.

(Lieutenant Charles King.)

SAMUEL NOAH,

No. 30—CLASS OF 1807.

Died March 10, 1871, at Mount Pulaski, Ill.: Aged 92.

SAMUEL NOAH, who was born July 19, 1779, in the city of London, died March 10, 1871, at Mount Pulaski, Logan county, Illinois, at the advanced age of nearly ninety-two, he having been for several years the senior surviving graduate of the U. S. Military Academy. He was of Jewish descent, and was the cousin of Mordecai M. Noah, formerly Consul to Tunis, and for many years the editor of various New York journals.

When twenty years old he emigrated to this country, and after a residence of several years in New York city, solicited a midshipman's appointment, but not succeeding, accepted May 5, 1805, that of a Cadet in the First Regiment of Artillery. Being intelligent and a good penman, he was often selected as amanuensis to the Superintendent of the Military Academy, and frequently acted as Judge-Advocate or Recorder of Courts at West Point. Upon graduation, December 9, 1807, preferring the infantry arm, he was promoted an Ensign in the Second Regiment, which, after a tedious journey, he joined at Cantonment Columbia Springs, in the rear of Fort Adams, Miss. Here he devoted his leisure hours to the study of the early campaigns of Napoleon, who was then the military prodigy of the world; but this fascinating occupation was soon interrupted by his having to watch smugglers on the Florida frontier and march from one unhealthy camp to another in the Gulf States. During these migrations he met Captain Winfield Scott just after his duel near Natchez with Dr. Upshur (brother of the Secretary of State blown up on board the Princeton), Lieutenant James Gibson, subsequently killed at the sortie from Fort Erie, General James Wilkinson, Captain Edmund P. Gaines, General Wade Hampton, and other since famous officers, of whom he had many anecdotes to relate. Wearied finally with slow promotion, and disgusted that ignorant civilians were appointed to rank him, he resigned, March 13, 1811, his commission of First Lieutenant in the Army.

Soon after this period, a Mexican deputation from the Junta of Coahuila, General Bernardo Gutierrez and Captain Manshac, arrived at Natchitoches, where Lieutenant Magee, a graduate of 1809, was stationed, and offered him the command with the rank of Colonel, of the combined force there assembled of Mexicans and Anglo-Americans. After Magee assumed the command, Noah, allured by visions of a golden future, joined as First Lieutenant this little undisciplined Falstaffian regiment on the Brazos river while on its march to Fort Bahia, which it entered November 14, 1812; but no sooner was the fort in possession of the "patriot army" than the Spanish royalists besieged it with a force of five times the strength of the garrison. In this struggle poor Colonel Magee sickened and died, and was buried with the honors of war during the enemy's cannonade, a 6-pounder ball lodging close to his grave. After the siege was raised, March 28, 1813, and the patriots reinforced, their little army, with Noah in command of its rear-guard, pursued and routed the Royalists April 4, 1813, in a sharp combat near San Antonio, and three days later entered the capital of Texas, Salcido, the governor surrendering at discretion with his entire force.

Informed soon after of the United States' declaration of war against Great Britain, Noah, true to the flag of his adopted country, left Texas, and, escaping through many perils by flood and field, reached the city of Washington, where he was most sadly disappointed in not being recommissioned by President Madison in the United States Army. Nothing daunted, however, he proceeded to New York, and volunteered his services as a private soldier in Captain Benjamin Dunning's company for the defence of Brooklyn, then being fortified with field works by General Joseph G. Swift, to repel an anticipated descent of the British on Long Island at Sag Harbor. His services here and at Harlem Heights, to the close of the war, in aid of the inexperienced militia forces, were most zealous and untiring, his military education, practical knowledge, and quick intelligence proving powerful auxiliaries to his patriotic devotion to duty. When he applied his helping hand to bring order out of the existing chaos, the condition of affairs will be best understood by the following order then published on parade by Brigade Major Hamilton :

"The general commanding feels himself impelled by the present exigency, which threatens an immediate call for actual hostilities and resolute resistance, to express his sentiments unreservedly to all the captains he now has the honor to command, for it must be apparent to them that, how respectable soever they may be at home, they are decidedly deficient in a military point of view, and consequently cannot, at this important crisis, be considered competent to perform the duties which must necessarily devolve upon them. He therefore confidently trusts that they will see the propriety of transferring their respective commands to the skilful superintendence of such capable officers as may be selected to succeed them, and return to their respective places of residence, both for the benefit of the service and the security of the State."

After the termination of Noah's military career he taught school near Goshen, New York, till 1820; then for two years was in England, being present at the trial of Queen Caroline and coronation of George IV.; resumed school teaching, and was employed in various academies in Virginia till May 24, 1848; and subsequently resided with a faithful friend at Mount Pulaski, Logan county, Illinois, where he died.

The romantic record of Samuel Noah's early life is full of wild adventure and thrilling incidents; his after history was a curious medley—almost the very counterpart of the vicissitudes to which Gil Blas was exposed; and his long declining years were an old age of poverty, with little relief even from sources upon which he confidently counted to ease his weary journey to the grave.

JOHN ELLIOTT,

Died April 18, 1871, at Dayton, Ohio: Aged 29.

CAPTAIN JOHN ELLIOTT, upon graduating at the Military Academy, was assigned as Second Lieutenant to the Second Artillery. He at once went into the field, participating in the siege of Petersburg, and several engagements, in one of which—the occupation of the Weldon Railroad—he was severely wounded, losing his left foot, thereby terminating his active usefulness in two months after graduating. He then received the brevet of First Lieutenant for “gallant services in the Campaign before Richmond, Va.,” and was retired from active service, though he was employed on constant duty during the war, in mustering, disbursing, etc. He was appointed Captain Forty-third Infantry July 28, 1866.

A friend writes of him: “Unfortunately his career was short. He received a severe wound within three months after joining his Company, to which his death is to be ascribed. The fortitude he has exhibited under his long and terrible suffering is a lesson for us to treasure. He commanded the respect of his superiors, and by his affable and gentlemanly manner soon gained the affection of his brother officers.

“A life of continued usefulness, honesty, and fidelity was assured had he lived. A true and affectionate friend has gone.” (Secretary of the Association.)

JAMES B. MACKALL,

Died April 18, 1871, at Santa Fe, N. M.: Aged 24.

LIEUTENANT JAMES BOND MACKALL was born in Barnesville, Ohio, February 21, 1844. He entered the Military Academy September 1, 1864, and graduated fifth in a class 54 members and was immediately commissioned a brevet Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers. He served with the Battalion of Engineers, at Willett's Point, New York Harbor, from October 1, 1868, until May, 1869; when having been attacked by hemorrhage of the lungs, he procured a leave of absence for two months, at the expiration of which he was ordered to New Mexico, and assigned to duty by the Commanding General, as Chief Engineer of that District, in the duties of which office he was engaged at the time of his death from consumption April 18, 1871.

He was conscientious and firm in the performance of his duty, considerate and gentle in disposition and bearing, a good officer, and a worthy friend.

JAMES CAMPBELL MORRISON,

No. 2234—CLASS OF 1868.

Drowned May 4, 1871, in Lake Ontario, near Fort Niagara, N. Y.: Aged 25.

LIEUTENANT JAMES CAMPBELL MORRISON was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, December 12, 1846.

He graduated at the Military Academy with distinction, and was appointed a Second Lieutenant in First Artillery. He met his fate in the gallant discharge of his duty, by the overturning of a boat in Lake Ontario. In him the service lost a brave officer, and all who knew him a valued friend.

(Lieutenant Albert H. Payson.)

JAMES LUCIUS DAVIS,

No. 722—CLASS OF 1833.

Died May 11, 1871, at Buckingham C. H., Va.: Aged 58.

COLONEL JAMES LUCIUS DAVIS, who was born January 25, 1813, in Clarke county, Virginia, died May 11, 1871, near Buckingham Court-house, Virginia, at the age of fifty-eight, his remains being carried to his family burial-ground in Henrico county for interment.

After receiving a good common-school education, Davis when sixteen years old entered as a Cadet the U. S. Military Academy, from which he was graduated July 1, 1833, and promoted in the Army to brevet Second Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment of Artillery. Besides performing ordinary garrison duty at various posts, he served in 1833-4 in protecting the Creek Indians against squatters, and again in 1836 as acting Adjutant to a force of artillery and mounted rifles under Captain Washington during hostilities in the Creek Nation. The "Creek War" having terminated, and Davis's health being much shattered by exposure during the campaign, he resigned his Second Lieutenantcy in the Army September 11, 1836.

Soon after, though feeble, he volunteered his services as Adjutant to Colonel John F. Lane, who commanded a mounted regiment composed chiefly of Echo Hadjo's band of friendly Indians, but his physical condition precluded the performance of his offer. To recruit his health he retired for two years to a farm in the valley of Virginia; but his old military instincts reviving with his improved state, he entered in 1839 the service of the Republic of Texas as Captain of Rangers, being chiefly employed against the Comanche Indians till 1841, when he resigned and again resumed farming in Virginia. While in the Texan army he prepared a work on "Light Artillery for Frontier Service," which, however, was not published.

Dangerous and protracted illness prevented his taking any part in the Mexican war; hence he had no further military career till 1861, except as brevet Colonel of Virginia cavalry and aide-de-camp to Governor Wise, in which capacity he served against John Brown's raiders at Harper's Ferry.

On the secession of Virginia in 1861, he followed the fortunes of his native State; was Colonel of the Forty-sixth Virginia Infantry, and subsequently of the Tenth Virginia Cavalry; and was wounded and captured on the 13th of June, 1863, remaining a prisoner of war till exchanged March 4, 1864. His last illness, brain fever, which terminated fatally, arose from an irritation of his old wound superinduced by exposure and hard study.

Colonel Davis was a laborious student, particularly on agricultural and educational subjects, to which he devoted much of his later years, he being, at the time of his death Superintendent of Public Instruction for the county of Buckingham, Virginia.

WILLIAM READING MONTGOMERY,

No. 419—CLASS OF 1825.

Died May 31, 1871, at Bristol, Pa.: Aged 70.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WILLIAM READING MONTGOMERY, who was born July 10, 1801, in Monmouth County, New Jersey, died May 31, 1871, at his residence in Bristol, Pennsylvania.

General Montgomery was the son of a Revolutionary sire, James Montgomery, who, after serving in 1775 in the assault of Quebec under his kinsman, General Richard Montgomery, fought at the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. His mother was the grand-daughter of Governor John Reading of New Jersey.

At the age of twenty Montgomery became a Cadet at the U. S. Military Academy, from which he was graduated July 1, 1825, and promoted in the Army Brevet Second Lieutenant in the Third Infantry, in which regiment he served, chiefly in the Western frontier, till July 7, 1838, when, becoming a Captain in the newly-organized Eighth Infantry, he was transferred to the Canada border for the suppression there of the disturbances of 1838-40. Subsequently he participated in the Florida hostilities of 1840-42, and in 1845 accompanied General Taylor's "Army of Occupation" to the Rio Grande. In the War with Mexico, which soon followed, he took an active part, being engaged at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Cerro Gordo, San Antonio, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec, and the City of Mexico. He was brevetted Major for his "gallant conduct at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma," in which latter battle he was wounded; and Lieutenant-Colonel for "gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Molino del Rey," where he was again wounded while assaulting the enemy's works with his regiment, to the command of which he had succeeded both his seniors on that field, Waite and Wright, having previously been struck down by the enemy's deadly fire. From 1848 he was on duty chiefly in Texas and on the Western Plains, till December 8, 1855, when his connection with the Army terminated.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, though Colonel Montgomery was sixty years old, he forgot his age, immediately organized the first regiment of New Jersey Volunteers, and took command with it at Vienna, Virginia, from which post he joined the reserve of the Union Army under Colonel Miles, and aided in covering its retreat from the disastrous battle-field of Bull Run. Soon after he was commissioned a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and appointed Military Governor of Alexandria, Virginia, where he remained till the close of the year. He then took command of Annapolis, Maryland, till May 17, 1862, and afterwards of Philadelphia till March 2, 1863. Failing health caused his resignation from the military service, April 4, 1864, after which, except during a brief interval of mercantile occupation in Philadelphia, he spent the remainder of his days in his quiet abode at Bristol, Pennsylvania. His infirmities continued to increase till death came to him on the verge of his threescore and ten years, giving him a release from this life and an entrance to a heavenly home, to which his faith had always pointed him.

THOMAS J. RODMAN,

No. 1065—CLASS OF 1841.

Died June 7, 1871, at Rock Island, Ill.: Aged 53.

BREVET BRIGADIER-GENERAL THOMAS J. RODMAN'S death was announced by the following order issued from the War Department:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT, }
WASHINGTON, June 9, 1871. }

Orders.

The Chief of Ordnance announces, with great sorrow, to the Department, the death of one of its most distinguished officers, Brevet Brigadier-General Thomas J. Rodman, Lieutenant-Colonel of Ordnance, Constructor of Ordnance, and Commander of Rock Island Arsenal, who died on the 7th instant, at that Arsenal, after a long and painful illness.

General Rodman graduated at the Military Academy in 1841, and was commissioned a Brevet Second Lieutenant in the Ordnance Department on the 1st of July of that year. His services in the Department were marked with singular ability, fidelity, and zeal, and every duty entrusted to him was performed well and with a sincere desire to advance the best interests of that profession to which he had devoted his life. The distinguished and valuable services rendered by him to the country are known and acknowledged by the Ordnance Department and by the Army, and have made his name famous in both Europe and America.

To him alone is due the honor of having recommended the manufacture of fifteen-inch and twenty-inch guns, which have been successfully made under his supervision, and tested and adopted for our military and naval service.

For the improvements which have been made in the mode of manufacture of gunpowder for large cannon within the last ten years the world is also indebted to him. The "mammoth powder" and the "perforated cake," which were used more than ten years ago in testing our first fifteen-inch gun, were made by him; and the trial of that gun in 1860 led to the adoption of the "mammoth powder" in 1861 for our guns of large calibre. Specimens of the "perforated cake powder" were taken from Fort Monroe to Russia by a distinguished artillery officer of the Russian Army in 1860. After having been successfully manufactured in Russia, it was tested with results so satisfactory that both that country and Prussia have adopted this kind of powder for their heavy rifle guns, to the exclusion of all other kinds. England has also very recently adopted for heavy rifle guns, under the name of "pebble powder," the "mammoth powder" of General Rodman, which we have been using since 1861. Thus have these powerful nations of Europe acknowledged the merits of his improvements in the manufacture of gunpowder for their most important and valuable cannon.

General Rodman's death is a loss to the Department that cannot be too deeply deplored, and leaves a void not easily filled.

The remembrance of his virtues and attainments will be an incentive to his comrades, both old and young, to emulate his example.

The officers on duty at Rock Island Arsenal (his late command) will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

THE ANNUAL DINNER.

The dinner hour was fixed at 3:30 P. M. to enable the guests to take advantage of the North and South evening trains.

The tables were arranged in the dining-room of the West Point Hotel, and seats assigned to those present from the centre table, by classes, according to the date of graduation.

Prof. DAVIES presided, with Mr. WILLARD on his right. Grace was said by the Rev. Dr. VINTON.

The regular toasts (prepared by Prof. MAHAN) were:

1. Our Country.
2. The Flag.
3. Our Alma Mater.
4. The President of the United States.
5. Our Army and Navy.
6. Our Citizen Soldiers.
7. Our Departed Comrades.
8. Our Departed President—General SYLVANUS THAYER.

There were no reporters present, and no formal speaking, those who responded to the toasts being called upon without any previous notification.

Brief speeches were made by Mr. WILLARD, Mr. MANSFIELD, Professors DAVIES, MAHAN, BARTLETT, CHURCH, and KENDRICK; Dr. VINTON, Hon. J. S. McCALMONT, Generals MCDOWELL, PITCHER, WEBB, and BURNETT; and Colonel CHURCH, Editor of the "Army and Navy Journal."

Mr. WILLARD, at the close of a very appropriate and welcome address, said:

"I do not believe that in the whole world a young man can so thoroughly prepare himself for the practical duties of life as here. With the armor of his practical education, he can grasp with the great problem of problems—'The greatest good to the greatest number;' and whether he is working out questions of mechanical engineering, mining, or the sciences, by which life is preserved or prolonged, he is alike fighting in the great line of progress, and helping our country take the highest place in history.

"I will close by giving—Our West Point Military Academy—May her graduates be as successful in overcoming the forces of Nature as they have been in conquering the enemies of our country."

Letters and telegrams of regrets and good wishes were received from Secretary FISH, Secretary BELKNAP, Admiral PORTER, Mr. GOUVERNEUR KEMBLE, and Prof. WEIR.

The whole day was one of great enjoyment, and nothing occurred to injure the feelings or mar the pleasure of any individual.

The following additions have been made to the Association records during the past year.

From General CULLUM; a copy of his "Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy;" A Memorial, in book form, with photograph, of the late Colonel JAMES MUNROE, and many invaluable contributions to the Neurology, Scrap-book, and other records.

Messrs. BALL, BLACK & CO., of New York city, presented a handsome case, lined with velvet, containing models in silver of all West Point class rings made by them, and the impressions of the seals in wax.

From various sources have been received, obituaries of graduates; additions to the Scrap-book, important corrections in the "Register of Graduates;" pamphlets on subjects of interest in Army matters, etc.

Much valuable assistance has been derived from the columns of the "Army and Navy Journal."

ADDRESS OF PROFESSOR CHARLES DAVIES, LL.D., BEFORE THE FIRST REUNION OF THE ALUMNI OF THE U. S. MILITARY ACADEMY, JUNE 17, 1870.

"FELLOW GRADUATES: The duty of presiding at our social gatherings has been assigned, by regulation, to the senior graduate present. In consequence of his declining, the duty devolves on me. In behalf of each for all and of all for each, I give you a hearty welcome to this, the first annual meeting of the Associated Alumni of the Military Academy. We mean to revive cherished memories, to strengthen friendships which can never die, and to renew, together, vows of perpetual allegiance to our country, which has educated us, and whose children we are. The place and the occasion are alike full of interest. Here, Nature has bestowed her choicest gifts. Here, the grand and beautiful inspire youth with nobility, and age with reverence. Here, history teaches lessons of patriotism, and science unfolds the laws of the universe. Here are the battlements of Revolutionary memory, constructed by Washington; here are the places, with their outlines yet distinctly preserved, which he hallowed by his presence; and here his memory and his example are sacredly cherished. Here are deposited the trophies of the sanguinary struggles of the Revolution, of the battles of the war of 1812, of the conquest of Mexico in 1847, and of the more recent and more terrible conflict, whose fruits must be peace, fraternity, and national unity.

“To give interpretation and effect to these memorials of the past, there have been engraved on the faces of the granite rocks—Bunker Hill, Yorktown, Vera Cruz, Buena Vista, and other names of like significance—so that passers-by may read national history and catch inspiration from national renown. Amid such surroundings we meet here to-day. But we come not either to recite or to write history. If the Military Academy have a history, it must be made, not written, by its graduates. We come together under the old flag, dear to every American heart, to recall and to contemplate that spring-time of life when hope and joy ruled the hour—when the reveille, in the freshness of the morning, awoke us to honorable labor, and the tattoo, after a day of toil, lulled us to pleasant rest. We come together as the scattered members of a household after a long separation—some full of years, some full of honors. We bring with us the garlands of affectionate memories for the honored dead who went to rest from the battle-field, and whose places are vacant here to-day. We tender our warmest sympathies to all those who walk cheerfully through life, maimed and disabled, that the nation might live. We, the graduates, are bound together, the living and the dead, by the tender sympathies of ingenuous youth, by the strong ties of a noble profession, by the undying love of a common country, and by these annual gatherings at the place we so much honor and love. Here the pulses of personal ambition cease to throb, for the fame of each is the common treasure of us all. May this sentiment fill the heart and guide the life of every graduate.”

NOTICE TO GRADUATES.

To perfect the Records of this Association, it is respectfully requested of all Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy in acknowledging the receipt of this pamphlet to its Secretary—Lieut. Edward H. Totten—that they will give their Military or Civil History since the publication in 1867, of “Cullum’s Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy;” and make corrections and supply any deficiencies in the foregoing Register which are lacking to complete the états de service of Graduates.

This Association has now been in existence for two years, faithfully carrying out the objects of its creation “to cherish the memories of our Alma Mater, and promote the social intercourse and fraternal fellowship of its Graduates.” Before its third Reunion, in June next, it is hoped that a large number will become life members of this worthy association, to which all Graduates are eligible on paying the sole charge of TEN DOLLARS as an initiation fee to make up a small fund, the interest of which is required to meet the cost of annual printing, postage, stationery, etc., for the society.
