

FOURTH
ANNUAL REUNION

OF THE

Association of the Graduates

OF THE

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,

AT

WEST POINT, NEW YORK,

JUNE 12, 1873.

NEW YORK:
D. VAN NOSTRAND, PUBLISHER,
23 MURRAY AND 27 WARREN STREET.

1873.

ANNUAL REUNION JUNE 12, 1873.

MINUTES OF THE BUSINESS MEETING.

WEST POINT, N. Y., June 12th, 1873.

The Association met in the Chapel of the United States Military Academy, and was called to order by Judge R. P. Parrott, Class of 1824, Chairman of the Executive Committee.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. C. C. Parsons, Class of 1861 (June).

The roll of the Members of the Association was then called by the Secretary.

NOTE—At the date of the Meeting there were 265 members upon the rolls, of those 90 were present and 14 had died.

Mr. SIMON WILLARD, class of 1815, the senior graduate present, and President of the Association, was called upon to preside, but declined in favor of Professor CHARLES DAVIES, class of 1815, who was conducted to the chair by General DANIEL TYLER, class of 1819, and Mr. SETH M. CAPRON, class of 1821.

ADDRESS OF PROFESSOR DAVIES.

FELLOW-GRADUATES : Another anniversary of our Association has brought us again together. Children of this national school, the cradle of our youth, we gather around the old homestead with the mingled feelings of reverence and love. Some of us, cadets of yesterday, full of youth and full of hope, are about to enter on the active duties of a noble profession ; some, full of honors, and bearing on their person the marks of many battles, behold with joy the old Academic Hall and those who ministered there, the guides of their early life ; while others, looking back through the long vista of more than half a century, welcome here to-day for you all, and in the name of you all, the graduates of fifty classes. To the returned graduate, a day spent here is a volume of history read in the freshness of personal recollections. Time disappears, and the scenes of youth spring up as by magic. The reveilles, as in days of yore, welcome the morning's light as it comes to tint mountain, and hill, and valley with its roscate hues. All nature greets us with her smiles, and amid so much freshness and beauty age readily mistakes the morning of day for the morning of life. But we come together not alone to dwell upon the present. Our meetings are connecting links between the past and the future ; and while we bring cordial welcomes to each other, we bring also garlands of affectionate remembrance, and place them reverently on the graves of the dead. Every year adds illustrious names to this roll of honor. Within the past year General Sylvanus Thayer, our late President, and for many years Superintendent of the Academy, has gone to his final rest, and taken his place in history. His life and a full account of his connection with the Academy have been written by General Cullum, his friend and pupil ; and these will be among the most valuable annals of our Association. But he has a more enduring and a more precious record. He lives in the institution itself, and his labors will ever form an important part of its history. He lives also in the profound respect and affectionate remembrance of the many graduates who grew up under his care, and love and duty will transmit these impressions to future classes. It is not too much for those who knew him long and well to say that here his memory will be as permanent as the granite hills which surround us, and as fresh as the May flowers which border the rivulets of the mountains. May peace and honor rest upon it, and may the twilight of this life be but the morning rays of another.

NECROLOGY.

The Secretary being called upon for the Necrology of Graduates for the year ending June 12, 1873, presented the following :

WILLIAM J. REESE.

No. 2296—CLASS OF 1869.

Died at Nashville, Tenn., June 20, 1872, aged 24.

In a few words the Army Register chronicles the death of one who was truly and thoroughly a soldier.

LIEUTENANT REESE left his home while still but a boy, to act a man's part, to do his share in helping to suppress the Rebellion. Not as an officer, but in the humble guise of a private soldier, he went, shouldering his musket, and cheerfully doing his part as one atom of that great mass whose deeds posterity shall never forget while we have a country to be proud of, or a history to teach our children, and doing his duty in such a way as to win the esteem and confidence of his officers, and the affection of his brothers in arms. Shoulder to shoulder with them he pressed onward, and when at last the goal was won and victory had perched upon the banner that he had followed with a boy's zeal and devotion, he came to the Military Academy as a cadet, appointed from his native State of Kentucky.

Many of us remember him as he reported in June, 1865, at the Academy, with his knapsack packed upon his back, fresh from the army, dressed in his simple soldier's garb, with the glorious dust of the "march to the sea" still upon it. No play soldier seemed he then, and as he stood there that bright June day, on the stoop of the old 8th Division, he looked what he was, every inch a man.

His four years at the Academy gained him none but friends, and when he left the Academy as a graduate in 1869, there was no hand in all the class that was not eager to clasp his in the final grasp—no voice that was not ready to claim him as a friend.

His service with his regiment was but a repetition of his former life. Ever ready for duty, always doing it well, his regiment and his classmates were both proud of him. But the climate of Texas where he was serving, proved too much for his strength, and at last he was reluctantly forced to accept a sick leave and go to his friends, his one aspiration being a speedy recovery, that he might rejoin his command, his one regret that he must leave his regiment and duty. But the respite came too late. He grew more and more feeble, and finally one evening retired saying that he felt fatigued and would rest a little while. He never rose from his bed again, but after a period of intense suffering which he bore with a soldier's fortitude, he cheerfully entered into his well earned rest.

So passed away one of those characters which Alma Mater may well be proud to count amongst her Alumni.

In the hearts of his classmates and brother officers the thought of him will be ever a bright memory, his history is a part of that of his country.

(Lieut. D. M. Taylor, U. S. A.)

FRANKLIN YEATON.

No. 2294—CLASS OF 1869.

Died August 17, 1872, at Naples, Maine, aged 24.

CAPTAIN FRANKLIN YEATON was born at Milltown, St. Stephen, New Brunswick, on the 14th of June, 1848, and began his military career in June, 1865, when he reported as a cadet at the Military Academy, having received his appointment from Maine, where for many years he had resided. He graduated in June, 1869, and at the close of his graduating leave of absence joined his regiment, the Third Cavalry, at Fort Stanton, New Mexico. Here he distinguished himself more than once by his behavior in the field against the Mescalero Apaches. In a fight with this tribe on the 26th of December, 1869, he was severely wounded by a rifle ball, which passing through his left wrist entered his right side, where it remained until his death; all efforts of the surgeons to find it being in vain. When able to move he came North on sick leave, from which he never returned to his regiment, dying at the residence of his relatives in Naples, Maine, on the 17th of August, 1872, having been retired, "on account of wounds received in the line of duty," with the full rank of Captain mounted, on November 14th, 1871.

His life was all too short to fulfil the brilliant promises that his earlier days so fully pictured forth. Cool, intelligent and daring, the service sustained in him a severe loss, and those of us who knew him personally as a cadet and officer feel that his death has left a blank in our circle that no one else can fill.

His quick mind and genial humor were well supplemented by his ready pencil, and hardly one of his classmates or friends but possesses some trifle, some sketch or little poem, to aid memory in recalling one whom we all held so dear. He made friends wherever he went, and of enemies had none.

General Orders No. 54 from the Headquarters, Department of the Missouri, of December 15th, 1869, in speaking of his first fight speaks of his gallantry, skill and perseverance; and his commanding officer, First Lieutenant H. B. Cushing, Third Cavalry, in his report of the same action commends him for coolness and gallantry. He was also highly complimented for the action in which he received the wound which finally killed him, but the official records make no mention of the patience with which he endured his suffering, after receiving his wound and during the long and painful journey back from the scene of action to his post. They speak not of his bravery in bearing his sufferings uncomplainingly up to the day of his death. Only those of us who knew him well can speak of that; and we know that in his death the service has lost an ornament it could ill afford to lose, the country has lost a devoted son, and Alma Mater one whose deeds, had fate not cut his young life short, would have lent new lustre to gild her old gray walls.

Kind friend, true man, gallant soldier! rest well! Light lie the sod above your head! Green grow the grass above you! and may the Master for your many virtues grant you free pardon for your few sins! Rest well until the Heavenly bugles shall sound the last Assembly, and for epitaph what more fitting for you than the words,

“His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him,
That Nature might stand up and say to all the world,
This was a man.”

(Lieut. D. M. Taylor, U. S. A.)

REID T. STEWART.

No. 2377, CLASS OF 1871.

Killed by Indians, August 27th, 1872, in Arizona Territory.

LIEUTENANT REID T. STEWART was born in Erie, Pennsylvania, March 25th, 1850. He was educated at the Philadelphia High School, and had completed the course at that institution when he entered the Military Academy in 1867. He graduated very creditably in 1871, and was assigned to the Fifth Cavalry, joining that regiment, as it was on its way to Arizona, in December of the same year. He served for a short time at Camp Lowell, A. T., and was then ordered with his company to Camp Crittenden, at which post he was serving at the time of his death.

He had been ordered to Tucson, A. T. as the Judge Advocate of a Court-martial about to assemble there, and while en route to that place, was way-laid and killed by a band of hostile Indians, August 27th, 1872.

(Lieut. George B. Davis, U. S. A.)

SYLVANUS THAYER.

No. 33—CLASS OF 1808.

Died September 7, 1872, at South Braintree, Mass., aged 87.

The following general order was published from the War Department announcing General THAYER'S death :

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, September 10, 1872.

General Orders No. 83.

The last of the distinguished Chiefs of Engineers of the war of 1812-15 with Great Britain is dead. Brevet Brigadier-General SYLVANUS THAYER, died at South Braintree, Massachusetts, on the 7th September, 1872, in his 88th year, at that time the senior living graduate of the Military Academy.

General Thayer was born in Braintree, Massachusetts, 9th June 1785; received a classical education at Dartmouth College; and 23d February, 1808, graduated at the Military Academy, whence he was promoted in the Corps of Engineers, in which, after serving in all the successive grades to that of Colonel, he continued until June 1, 1863, when his active career of usefulness for more than half a century was ended by age and feeble health.

Called to the field in 1812, though a Lieutenant, he became Chief Engineer to General Dearborn, commanding on the Niagara frontier; in 1813, of the Right Division of the Northern Army, under General Hampton, on the Champlain line of operations; and in 1814, of General Moses Porter's troops, in the defence of Norfolk, where, for his "distinguished and meritorious services," he was brevetted a Major.

Subsequently Major Thayer was ordered to accompany Commodore Decatur on the expedition against Algiers, but this destination was changed to Europe, where he had opportunities of witnessing the operations of the allied armies before Paris, and of studying the military works and schools of France, Netherlands, &c., thus improving himself professionally and laying the foundation of his future career.

Returning to the United States in 1817, he was appointed Superintendent of the Military Academy, and served in that capacity for sixteen years, during which time, under his able administration, the Institution, from a rudimentary school, became one justly celebrated throughout the land, serving at once as a fostering mother to the Army, as the pioneer instructor of the Engineers of most of the public works of the country, and as a monument of his own fame.

On retiring from the Military Academy in 1833, Colonel Thayer was charged with the construction of the permanent defences of Boston Harbor, which were nearly completed according to his designs, under his own supervision, and which will long serve as models of engineering construction.

General Thayer's administration of his public trusts was always efficient, economical, and faithful. Enthusiastic in his profession and emulous of reputation, he was not envious of others; though reserved in manner he was always courteous; and, while avoiding controversy, he did not hesitate to declare his opinions and to sustain them by arguments.

The great worth and services of this veteran soldier are gratefully remembered by the graduates of the Military Academy, of which he is justly styled "the Father," and his name will be entwined with the laurels which many of them have gathered on the battle-field.

As a tribute to his memory, the officers of the Corps of Engineers will wear the usual badge of military mourning for thirty days, and the day after the receipt of this order at West Point, half-hour guns will be fired, beginning at sunrise and ending at sunset; the national flag being displayed at half-staff during that time.

By order of the Secretary of War :

WILLIAM D. WHIPPLE,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

[It is greatly regretted that General Cullum's absence in Europe has prevented the completion of an extended obituary of General Thayer in time for this publication. It will, however, be presented shortly for the benefit of the Association of Graduates.]

Secretary of the Association.

FRANCIS VINTON.

No. 590—CLASS OF 1830.

Died September 29, 1872, at Brooklyn, N. Y., aged 63.

FRANCIS VINTON, D. D., D. C. L., LL. D., was born in Providence, R. I., on the 20th of August, 1809, and entered the Military Academy in June, 1826, the youngest of three brothers, all of whom graduated with distinction. The eldest, Major John R. Vinton, fell at the siege of Vera Cruz, March 22d, 1847. The second, Gen. David H. Vinton, having spent a life of usefulness and honor in the military service, survived his younger brother only a few months, and by his death, added another distinguished name to the remarkable list of the departed graduates of the year 1872-3.

No one ever entered the Military Academy who at once more thoroughly appreciated the advantages of his position, or who more faithfully devoted himself to the work which he had undertaken, than did Francis Vinton. An industrious and conscientious student, ever ready on the lessons of the day, he yet found abundant time to devote to literary improvement and thus, even as a cadet, won a high reputation as a writer and speaker.

Graduated in June, 1830, he was appointed a Second Lieutenant in the 3d Artillery, and reported for duty at Fort Independence, Boston Harbor, in the following autumn. Entering his name at the Law School of Harvard University, he resumed his studies with renewed vigor, feeling that his course at the Academy had just prepared him to begin to learn. Unremitting in his labors, while faithfully performing all his military duties, he undertook a thorough course of general literature, in which he found great delight, and on which he built the foundation of his future fame. Among the first in his understanding of the science of the law, he was unsurpassed by any in his powers of argument and debate. It seemed that in his devotion to this noble science, he was at the very outset, to take a high stand at the Bar, and to see fulfilled, in his earliest days, all his dreams of honorable success. He loved the science of the law, for which his mind and habits of thought were so admirably formed, and in these days of its earnest study, he laid up a store of its best principles, which served him well in his after career as a clergyman of the church.

But the orders of his superiors in the Army were soon to interrupt and eventually to overthrow all these well formed plans for earthly honors, and to turn the energies of his mind and heart into a far different channel. Unexpectedly detailed for engineer duty, he was obliged to suspend his studies and go where this duty called him. Returning to his regiment after an absence of two years, including a short service in the Creek country, he joined his company in Portsmouth N. H., and in 1834 was admitted to the Bar of Massachusetts. His thoughts, however, were now fixed upon a higher profession, and he never entered upon the practice of the law, for which he was so eminently fitted. Resigning his commission in 1836, he entered the General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church in the city of New York. Here he was soon remarkable for his great devotion and untiring study, finding time, as ever heretofore, for other duties of his Christian calling, visiting the sick and sorrowful, ministering to the wants of the poor and doing his Master's work wherever it was to be found.

Graduating from the seminary, he was ordained to the ministry in 1839, by the Right Reverend Bishop Griswold, of Massachusetts. Without delay he entered upon the duties of his new profession in a small parish in his native State, but was not allowed to remain long in this humble position. His eloquence and self-sacrificing devotion to his pastoral work soon attracted attention and called him to other more important positions, first at Providence, then at Newport, and finally, in 1844, to the parish of Emmanuel Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., then feeble, but soon by his labors changed to one of the strongest and most prosperous, with one of the finest churches in the State, Grace Church, built under his own personal supervision, and filled by crowds of worshippers drawn not only by his eloquence, but by his earnest work from house to house, among the people of his adopted city.

In the words of his friend and rector, Dr. Dix, for several years his associate minister in Trinity Parish, New York, "he was instant in season and out of season, unwearied in visiting his flock, in ministering to all their needs, and in preaching the word of life, a shining example to all who witnessed his zeal and love for the Lord and His church." Though called to other important parishes and once elected to the Bishopric of the Diocese of Indiana, he felt it his duty to decline, and to remain with the people whom he had so strongly attached to himself, and whom he ever loved as his own. In 1852 he was warmly urged, and supported by a large number of friends, for the vacant Bishopric of New York. He failed of election by a few votes, much to the disappointment of many who believed that his talents, habits of order and discipline, well fitted him for this important position.

In 1855 he was elected an assistant minister of Trinity parish in the city of New York, and entered upon his work there with all his vigor and enthusiasm. In 1859 he was specially assigned to the charge of Trinity Church, and here he ever after felt he had reached his greatest field of action and usefulness. It was his just pride to render the services in this magnificent church, not only impressive but attractive, and such was his success, that on every Sunday the church was filled to its utmost extent, and few left the well ordered and solemn services without a better heart and more full impression of true Christian worship.

A few years before his death, he was appointed to the Professorship of Canon Law in the seminary whence he set forth on his ministry. Peculiarly qualified for a professorship of this kind, by his early study of law at Cambridge and by his habits of order and discipline acquired at West Point, his success in this new sphere was complete. A clergyman of the Church says of him: "Dr. Vinton was the most dignified and respected professor with whom I ever studied. He was always thoroughly prepared for his recitations and lectures; and his treatment of his classes was such, that however much his students differed from him in their views, they were unanimous in their testimony to his kindness and impartiality." In this connection he prepared and published an able treatise on the Canon Law.

In the autumn of 1871, with failing health, he preached his last sermon in Trinity, and by advice of his physicians went to the island of Nassau, in vain hopes of improvement in that mild climate. Returning, the following spring, to his much loved home in Brooklyn, he lingered on through the summer of 1872, and until the 29th of September, when, surrounded by devoted wife and loving children, he calmly passed away.

Dr. Vinton was a remarkable man. With talents of the highest order, cultivated and trained by hard study; with an untiring energy and a determined will; with an eloquence of voice and manner seldom surpassed, he could not have failed of great success in any profession. With almost unlimited power of language, he was an eloquent speaker, a clear and logical debater, a magnificent reader of Holy Scripture, and again, to quote from the memorial sermon of Dr. Dix, "was conspicuous in the councils of the Church, general and diocesan; in public meetings, which he often had occasion to address, and where he was heard with great attention and pleasure; at the anniversaries of our charitable institutions, and in the social meetings and merry makings of the schools and similar organizations, where his manner and words always gave zest to the general mirthfulness." Social in his disposition, he delighted in the society of the intelligent, and in this society was ever full of wit and playfulness, and yet at his own pleasant fireside in the midst of a loving and respecting family he ever found his greatest happiness, his most unalloyed enjoyment. He was a lover of children, and whether surrounded by them in the Sunday-school or joining in their sports on the play-ground, he was devoted to their instruction and happiness, and was with them a general favorite. He was the first to introduce the custom of Christmas tree festivals, for their amusement and reward, a custom now so extended in our country and popular with all denominations of Christians. He loved the Military Academy as his educating mother, and all things connected with West Point. Twice he was a member of the Board of Visitors, once its President, and in this capacity worked faithfully for the interests of the institution he so much venerated. He was among the first in efforts to organize our Association, and those present at our first two meetings will remember how much he contributed by his wit and humor to its success. Above all he loved his country, and in her darkest hours did all in his power for her honor and salvation, and when peace was restored he was among the most earnest in his efforts, by word and deed, to bring about forgetfulness of the causes and consequences of strife, and to cultivate anew a common love of a common country.

FERDINAND S. MUMFORD.

No. 981—CLASS OF 1838.

Died October 1st, 1872, at San Francisco, Cal., aged 54.

MR. MUMFORD was born in the State of New York, and was appointed a Cadet at the U. S. Military Academy from that State, graduating in 1838.

July 1st, 1838, he was promoted to Second Lieutenant, 1st U. S. Infantry; June 11th, 1839, First Lieutenant, and March 15th, 1848, Captain in the same regiment.

He served: in the Florida War, 1839; on sick leave of absence, 1839-41; on frontier duty at Fort Snelling, Minn., 1841-43; at Fort Winnebago, Wis., 1843-45, and Jefferson Barracks, Mo., 1845-46; on recruiting service, 1846-48; in the War with Mexico, 1848, at the City of Mexico, and in garrison at East Pascagould, Wis., 1848, and Fort Brown, Texas, 1848-49.

He resigned from the army August 31st, 1849, and resided, until his death, in California, for some years as a merchant, and for the past fifteen years quite distinguished as a practising lawyer in San Francisco.

HARTMAN BACHE.

No. 198—CLASS OF 1818.

Died Oct. 8th, 1872, at Philadelphia, Pa., aged 74.

BREVET BRIGADIER-GENERAL HARTMAN BACHE was born September 3, 1798, at Philadelphia, Pa. His father was Benjamin Franklin Bache, the eldest grandson of the celebrated Dr. Franklin, by whom he was carefully educated in France, the accomplished pupil proving eminently worthy of his distinguished ancestor.

General Hartman Bache, after receiving a good English and classical education, entered the U. S. Military Academy when scarce sixteen, from which institution he was graduated July 24, 1818, and at once entered the army as assistant topographical engineer, with the rank of brevet captain in the general staff. From this time until 1847 he was engaged chiefly on surveys for coast defences, naval depots, harbor and river improvements, roads and canals, and for light-house sites; in the meanwhile having been brevetted July 24, 1828, a major "for faithful service ten years in one grade," and promoted to be brevet major of staff (Topographical Engineer) August 1, 1833, and major in the Corps of Topographical Engineers upon its formation July 7, 1838. In the execution of these numerous and varied surveys he was, says the Chief of Engineers, "the first to use, in this country, the refined methods of survey and mapping, and the results of his labors have served as models to the present day." Of his Charleston harbor survey and map, perhaps his chef-d'œuvre, we can speak in the highest terms of commendation, having constantly used it for years while superintending the construction of the defences, light-houses, and improvements of its harbor, never during that period having discovered the slightest inaccuracy in its admirable topography and hydrography.

In 1835 Bache had designed a masonry light-house for Brandywine shoal in Delaware Bay, and had commenced its foundations; but in 1847, he decided to construct it with Mitchell's iron screw-piles, which had been so successfully used at the Maplin sands, Wye entrance, and for other lights on the stormy British coast. The Brandywine shoal light-house had its focal plane forty-six feet above the sea level, a convenient keeper's dwelling being arranged just below the lantern. For its protection against the heavy drift ice of Delaware Bay, a strong, elongated, hexagonal ice-breaker was formed of thirty-seven iron screw-piles, thoroughly connected by iron braces, to diffuse the violent ice concussions over the whole structure. This screw-pile light and its ice-breaker, built at an expense of less than $65,000, have successfully encountered storm and flood for nearly a quarter of a century, and yet stand as enduring monuments of their constructor's engineering skill.

Bache, after the completion of these works, became a member of the Board of Engineers for Lake harbors, and Western rivers; and from 1855 to 1859 was on duty on the Pacific coast as light-house engineer and inspector, and in charge of military roads. Returning to the Atlantic June 16, 1859, he was till April 11, 1861, the light-house engineer of the extended coast line comprising the Fourth, Fifth, and Seventh light-house districts. Upon these three classes of engineering—harbors, rivers, and light-houses—he had bestowed much patient study and close observation. As a noted instance of his attention to the first class may be cited that, as early as 1822, while he was making surveys at Mount Desert Island in Maine, and a quarter of a century before the first breakwater at Dover, on the coast of England, was built, he discovered in one of nature's harbors the advantages in deep water of a vertical exterior face for breakwaters, of which he was ever after the earnest advocate; of the second class may be adduced his successful plan for improving the navigation of the River Thames in Connecticut by a system of wing-dams and dredging; and of the last, his numerous light-house works attest his constructive skill.

During the Rebellion, from April 11, 1861, to June 16, 1862, Bache was on duty in the Topographical Bureau at Washington City, first in charge, and then as an assistant; and subsequently, till the termination of his military career, February 21, 1870, he was a very efficient member of the Lighthouse Board, being also, from November 5, 1864, to November 11, 1865, in charge of the defences of the Delaware. In the meanwhile he had been promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, Corps of Topographical Engineers, August 6, 1861, and Colonel Corps of Engineers, March 3, 1863, when the former corps was merged in the latter; brevetted Brigadier-General U. S. Army, March 13, 1865, "for long, faithful, and meritorious services;" and retired from active service, March 7, 1867, after half a century of faithful duty in the Army and of conscientious devotion to his profession. With just pride, therefore, did he say, a few weeks before his death, "I have never in my long period of service asked to be relieved from an order, and never but once for leave of absence, which was to enable me to join my son (Colonel F. M. Bache), dying in 1867 in France from disease contracted while with the Army of the Potomac."

Though deprived, a week after his birth, of the fostering care of a father, Bache, by his careful self-culture, untiring industry, methodical habits, and mental discipline, proved a worthy descendant of an illustrious ancestry, and honored a name as noted in social circles as eminent for science. From his first entrance into the Military Academy he exhibited striking characteristics. Though staid, was courteous in manner, zealous and devoted to duty, firm and fearless in right, solid and stable in judgment, subordinate to superiors, and loving to comrades, and with all possessing a fine figure, lithe as a Gaul, soldierly bearing, and manly presence, was the pattern lad of his class, upon whom was bestowed its highest military honor—the Colonel of the Corps of Cadets. The boy proved the father to the man, who, as an officer in every grade, performed all that was intrusted to him with steady persistency and exhaustive thoroughness; was ever at his post of duty, and neglected no responsibility imposed by the Government; though decidedly pertinacious in his professional opinions, was never dogmatic in their advocacy; and, while a strict disciplinarian, he so tempered his authority with justice and kindness that obedience was more the result of affection than of command. But, with all his soldierly qualities, he was yet more estimable in his domestic sphere. Simple and unostentatious in manner; modestly reserved, with dignified self-respect; deferential to equals, and reverent to superiors; polished in speech, and genial intercourse; cheerful in spirit, and equable in temper; truthful to bluntness, conveying no false impression; neither the flatterer of power nor the detractor of merit; sensitive of his honor, and of spotless integrity; faithful in friendship, and sympathetic to misfortune; mild in his judgments, and nobly forgiving; denying to self, but lavish in charity; of masculine firmness, with the tenderness of woman; passionately fond of children, ever won by his caresses; and devoted to his family, of which he was the perpetual idol. His harmonious development of character, strengthened with his years, leaving no wrinkles on the heart; his freshness of feeling was never hardened or perverted by the world; but he continued good without affectation, bountiful without ostentation, full of generous impulses and manly excellence, and in the shadow of death could truthfully say that—

“ We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
 In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
 We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
 Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.”

(Bot. Major-General George W. Cullum.)

GEORGE GORDON MEADE.

No 804, CLASS OF 1835.

Died Nov. 6, 1872, at Philadelphia, Pa., aged 57.

AT a meeting held at the Philadelphia Academy of Music, in memory of the late Major-General Meade, the oration on the dead soldier was delivered by Major-General Humphreys. The Secretary of the Association has taken the liberty of using extracts from this, that relate more directly to General Meade's personal record.

As the friend and associate of the soldier whose loss the Army and the nation deplore, I have been asked to address you concerning his military services. It is fitting that this duty should be devolved on me, for undoubtedly was more intimately associated with him during the time he commanded the Fifth Corps and the Army of the Potomac than any other officer. Besides, I have known him ever since his entrance into the service, then an intelligent, a polished, and witty young officer, on duty with the troops in Florida.

My second recollection of him is as an engineer, engaged under Captain Talcott, of the Corps of Engineers, upon an elaborate survey and investigation at the mouths of the Mississippi river, in which the facts elicited by some original experiments of his led me, many years after, to a series of investigations which developed the law governing the formation of the bars and shoals at the mouth of that river, from which most important consequences have followed for the improvement of navigation and the increase of commerce.

We next find Meade engaged in the survey of the northeast boundary line between the United States and Great Britain; then in river and harbor improvements; and in the Mexican war we see him as an officer of engineers on the staff of General Taylor and of General Scott, distinguished for skill and intrepidity; subsequently he was occupied with lighthouse construction, and during the four years preceding the civil war had charge of the geodetic survey of the great lakes, in his conduct of which he added largely to his scientific and engineering reputation.

I have referred to these varied occupations because they gave the training which fitted him for the great part he was soon to fill. In them he learned to plan carefully in advance, and to execute promptly and thoroughly; here he acquired the habit of quick and accurate observation, and became fertile in expedients to meet unlooked for exigencies.

Early in the civil war we find him a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, commanding a brigade in the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, which constituted a division in the Army of the Potomac, and taking an active part in the battles of Gaines' Mill and Glendale, in the last days of June, 1862, being severely wounded in the latter. Returning to the field as soon as the condition of his wound would permit, he was assigned to the command of a division, and distinguished himself in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, being placed in command of Hooker's Corps when that officer was wounded and taken from the field. For these services he was promoted to the rank of Major-General of Volunteers in November of 1862.

As a division commander, he was impetuous in attack, and at Fredericksburg broke through the right of Lee's line, and penetrated far to its rear, but was overborne by numbers and forced back with heavy loss. Quickly following this conspicuous service, he was, in the latter part of December, 1862, promoted to the command of the Fifth Army Corps, and at Chancellorsville his sagacious advice and soldierly bearing made so profound an impression upon the Commander of the Army of the Potomac that, in asking, some two months later, to be relieved from its charge, he designated General Meade as his successor.

On the morning of the 28th of June, 1863, when in the vicinity of Frederick, Md., with the Fifth Corps, General Meade was placed by the President in command of the Army of the Potomac, which at that time was not far from Frederick, following carefully the movements of Lee.

* * * * *

On the morning of the 29th Meade put his army in motion for Harrisburg, expecting to compel the enemy to turn and meet him in battle. We have seen that Lee, on the evening of that day, prepared to do so.

On the evening of the 30th the several corps of the Army of the Potomac were on the roads leading to Gettysburg, from the east round to the south, and at distances from the town varying from ten to fifteen miles, excepting the Sixth Corps, which was more than thirty miles off. Buford, with his division of cavalry, was in Gettysburg. On that same night Meade learned from Buford that the heads of Lee's columns were moving on the roads leading to Gettysburg, and were probably nearer than his to Gettysburg.

Being entirely ignorant of the character of the ground about Gettysburg, he at once prepared a precautionary order of instructions to the corps commanders, not to be executed unless specially ordered at a subsequent time in a certain contingency, explaining the routes which the several corps should follow to concentrate in a good position on Pipe Clay Creek, some three miles in rear of his headquarters at Taneytown. (Taneytown, it may be remarked, is about thirteen miles south of Gettysburg.)

These instructions stated, "Developments may cause the Commanding General to assume the offensive from his present positions." Not many hours after the issuing of these instructions new developments did cause him to change his plans; but these instructions evince that foresight which proves his capacity to command an army. In similar circumstances the agreement between Wellington and Blucher to concentrate their two armies—nearly double the numbers of Napoleon—far to the rear in the vicinity of Waterloo, has been esteemed a proof of their great ability. On the evening of the 30th, Reynolds, with the First and Eleventh Corps, was ordered to move on the morning of the 1st of July from Emmettsburg to Gettysburg, and to report whether that site afforded a good field of battle.

The Third Corps was to be in Emmettsburg on the morning of the 1st, and in fact reached there before all the Eleventh Corps had left it. About noon of the 30th I was requested by General Meade to examine the ground in the vicinity of Emmettsburg upon the arrival there of the Third Corps, the Second Division of which I commanded, and ascertain whether it afforded a good position for battle. The importance of the general position of Emmettsburg is derived from the fact that a piked road leads to it through the mountains from the Chambersburg valley (along which part of Lee's force might move), and that good branch roads lead to it along the foot of the mountains from the Cashtown pass. I have mentioned these two facts concerning Reynolds and myself to show that Meade was active in learning all that could be ascertained of the several positions where he might fight to advantage, as well as in moving toward Lee, and bringing the different parts of the Army of the Potomac within supporting distance of each other. That army consisted of about 70,000 infantry, 10,000 cavalry, and 300 guns. The Army of Northern Virginia consisted of about 85,000 infantry, 8,000 cavalry, and a due proportion of artillery.

We all know how, on the morning of the 1st of July, Reynolds encountered Hill two or three miles west of Gettysburg, and was killed early in the day; how Ewell arrived on the ground soon after, and how the First and Eleventh Corps were forced back to the position on which the fighting of the 2d and 3d of July took place. We know, too, that as soon as Meade learned what had occurred, the Third, Twelfth, and other corps were hurried up to the scene. Hancock, who was with Meade at Taneytown at the time, was despatched to take command of the advance, and he reported at about half-past five that the position was sufficiently good, when Meade set the remainder of the army in motion for the field, and arrived upon the ground at midnight. All the army was concentrated there by one o'clock next day.

One of Meade's first directions to his Chief of Staff, Butterfield, upon reaching there, was to learn everything about the roads leading to and from Gettysburg, so as to be prepared for any event that might occur—a very proper direction to give. All the Army of Northern Virginia was concentrated at Gettysburg during the night, except Pickett's Division of Longstreet's Corps, which did not arrive until the morning of the 3d.

* * * * *

The disposition Meade made of his troops was the best the ground and circumstances permitted. The features of the battle-field are so well known that I shall not stop to describe them.

You all know how the battle on the second day went on, and that the hardest fighting of the three days of battle took place on it. Lee attacked our left with Longstreet's Corps and part of Hill's under the cover of woods, which concealed their approach, and a long-continued desperate struggle ensued, lasting from half-past four until seven o'clock, in which we lost the advanced part of the ground we had taken up, but the main position remained intact.

On the third day Lee resumed the attack with Pickett's Division of Longstreet's Corps (which had arrived that morning) and Heth's Division of Hill's Corps, supported by two divisions which did not largely participate in the struggle. The advance of the leading divisions was made over clear, open ground, and was preceded by a heavy fire from 115 guns.

The gallant manner in which this advance was made under the powerful fire of our artillery and infantry, extorted the admiration of those against whom it was directed. But through the excellent disposition of Meade, ably seconded by his commanders, and the skill and courage of our officers and men, all the attacking force that reached our lines became our prisoners, as well as a considerable portion of the supporting divisions, and the third day terminated in a victory for us, and the demolition of all Confederate plans.

Of all the sublime sights within the view and comprehension of man, the grandest, the most sublime is a great battle. Its sights and sounds arouse a feeling of exaltation, compared to which tame indeed is the sense of the sublime excited by all other great works, either of God or man. No grander sight was seen throughout the war than this great battle between two brave, well-disciplined and ably commanded armies.

Immediately upon the repulse, Meade ordered an advance from the left, which went forward, but the day was too far spent for any important result to be gained. Longstreet and Hill ardently wished for a return attack upon their lines.

Lee's losses were 18,000 killed and wounded, and 13,600 missing, a large part of the latter being our prisoners, making a total loss of 31,600. Our losses were 16,500 killed and wounded, and 6,600 missing, chiefly prisoners captured the first day, making a total loss of not less than 23,000.

* * * * *

Meade, who was a Major in the Corps of Engineers, was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General in the regular Army, and was gratified at this mark of approval.

He had to bear many unjust criticisms on his conduct at the battle, and condemnation for not capturing the whole of Lee's army. But time effaces all such attempted blemishes as these, and, I believe, Meade always felt satisfied that history would do him justice.

After crossing the Potomac, Lee was disposed to remain near Winchester, among the fertile products of the valley of Virginia; but a well-directed thrust by Meade, through Manassas Gap, sent Lee rapidly out of the valley and across the Rappahannock.

On this river the Army of the Potomac was ordered from Washington to rest, and several detachments were made from it to the City of New York, to North Carolina, and elsewhere.

In September, Meade, having ascertained that Longstreet's Corps had been sent to Bragg, on the Tennessee river, excepting Pickett's Division, which was recruiting south of the James, moved forward, and Lee fell back behind the Rapidan, a more defensible river than the Upper Rappahannock. At this time the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were detached from the Army of the Potomac and sent to Chattanooga, and the two opposing armies on the Rapidan were reduced to about equal numbers.

Early in October, Meade was contemplating a movement upon Lee by our right flank, and on the morning of the 9th rode to Cedar Mountain to have a better look at the country in the direction of a certain mountain-pass, when he discovered that Lee was making some movement on our right; and at the same moment intelligence from the pickets and signal stations began to pour in, but the nature of the movement could not be ascertained with certainty until Lee had concentrated his whole army in the rear and right of Meade, threatening to intercept and break up his lines of communication.

The Army of the Potomac was at once set in motion, and directed toward Warrenton, with the intention of attacking Lee while in the act of crossing the Rappahannock, with every chance of a successful issue. But when the movement was half through, one of Meade's commanders brought him wrong information of the movements, position, and apparent object of Lee, while from another commander, who should have furnished the most important information of all, he received none whatever. In this manner he was misled, a part of his army was placed in a critical condition, and the opportunity of attacking Lee was lost. There followed a series of manœuvres by the two armies, during which the brilliant combats of Bristoe Station and Rappahannock Bridge took place, the movement ending in Lee's re-crossing the Rapidan. After the war, Lee acknowledged to Meade that his scheme had been frustrated in this operation—that he had been completely outmanœuvred.

* * * * *

Before the season for active operations returned, General Grant had been appointed Lieutenant-General, and placed in command of all the armies. He concluded to make his headquarters with the Army of the Potomac, Burnside's Corps, and the Army of the James.

During the winter and the spring, the Army of the Potomac had been reinforced, and when the campaign opened consisted of 76,000 infantry, in three corps, commanded by Sedgwick, Hancock, and Warren, and about 12,000 cavalry, commanded by Sheridan, with a large artillery force, having its own guard, which, when the artillery was reduced (about the middle of May), was joined to one of the infantry corps. Burnside had some 15,000 or 20,000 men, which united with the Army of the Potomac early on the morning of the 6th of May, the second day of the battle of the Wilderness.

Lee's force consisted of three corps, each about 20,000 strong, commanded by Ewell, Hill and Longstreet, who arrived the 3d of May, and 8,000 or 10,000 cavalry, commanded by Stewart, with a due proportion of artillery.

The artillery of both armies was more than could be used in that country, and with us was cumbersome, and therefore reduced when we were near Fredericksburg.

The object of the campaign was to fight Lee's army and break it to pieces. Failing in that, upon our forcing it back upon Richmond, we were to destroy all lines of supply to that city upon the north bank of the James river; then cross over, and, encircling the town, destroy all the lines of supply on the south side. * * * * *

Accordingly it was decided to move by the left. The project was to get through the Wilderness quickly, and endeavor to cut Lee's line of communication, the Central Railroad, somewhere between Louisa Court-house and Gordonsville, and attack him in the comparatively open country.

The moment our movement was perceived Lee concentrated. Ewell, being nearest to us, was thrust along the pike against us; Hill along the Orange Court-house plank-road; Longstreet was to come up on our left flank. By simply thrusting himself against us we were obliged to stop our movement to attack Lee; we could not go on; if we did, he would watch his opportunity and overwhelm some portion that was exposed.

Meade knew that Lee's best course was to move against us and to force us to attack him in the Wilderness, as I have already stated. Therefore when, early in the morning of the second day of the movement, advance parties of the enemy attacked our cavalry on the Orange Court-house plank-road and the advance guard thrown out on the pike, Meade apprehended that the first battle would be fought in the Wilderness. But there was no means of telling at first whether these small attacks were made simply by very advanced parties of the enemy, made for the purpose of interrupting and delaying our march, or were made by the advanced guards of Lee's main army. There was but one thing to do—to attack at once, clear them out of the way if we could, take prisoners, and find out where the main force of the army was. Hancock, who moved promptly in the morning from Chancellorsville on the route directed in the General Order of the 3d of May, was directed to halt at Todd's Tavern until it could be ascertained what the enemy's intentions were. They were soon disclosed. Ewell and Hill were close upon us, and were at once attacked by the Fifth Corps. Hancock was brought back from the vicinity of Todd's Tavern to the intersection of the Orange plank-road with the Brock road. Until he could get up, Getty's Division of the Sixth Corps was sent to that intersection, and was at once engaged with Ewell. The Sixth Corps was posted on our right.

Thus commenced that extraordinary series of battles of two months' duration, at the termination of which the Army of the Potomac had lost more than 60,000 men killed and wounded.

The position of General Meade all this time was a delicate one, owing to the near presence of an officer of superior rank and command. He acquitted himself in it in such a manner as to command the respect and esteem of General Grant, between whom and himself there was, I believe, complete accord. For his eminent services in the campaign Meade was made a Major-General in the Regular Army.

The close of June saw the commencement of what is termed the siege of Richmond and Petersburg, which lasted until the 1st of April, 1865. During this long period many operations, battles, and combats took place, with varying success. Throughout them all the marked ability of Meade as a commander was conspicuous.

The breaking of the lines of Petersburg on the 1st of April was succeeded by the flying, fighting retreat, and surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, and with that surrender came peace.

Perhaps the very imperfect reference to General Meade's military life which I have just made may serve to show what a great experience he had, and how valuable to his country his life has been, and that his death in full bodily and mental vigor is a great national loss.

FRANCIS D. NEWCOMB.

No. 386—CLASS OF 1824.

Died Nov. 28, 1872, at Havana, Cuba, aged 71.

FRANCIS D. NEWCOMB was appointed a Cadet in the U. S. Military Academy, from his native State, Massachusetts, graduated and was promoted in the Army to Brevet Second Lieutenant, 2d Infantry, July 1, 1824. The same date, he received his promotion to Second Lieutenant, 4th Infantry, and First Lieutenant, 4th Infantry, April 4, 1832, and was an Assistant Quartermaster from October 7, 1830, to September 30, 1836, when he resigned his commission in the Army. With the exception of one year, 1824-25, when on duty at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., his whole service was on garrison and Quartermaster duty in the South, principally in Florida.

He was Surveyor-General of the State of Louisiana from 1840-44, and in 1845 went to Cuba, where he resided until his death. Nothing of his civil history is shown upon the records of the Association.

(Secretary of the Association.)

FRANCIS BEACH.

No. 1775—CLASS OF 1857.

Died February 5, 1873, at New York City, aged 43.

BREVET LIEUTENANT-COLONEL FRANCIS BEACH, Captain U. S. Army, was born at Hartford, Conn., on the 2d day of May, 1835. He was appointed a Cadet of the U. S. Military Academy in 1853, and graduated in 1857. He was appointed Brevet Second Lieutenant U. S. Artillery, and assigned to the 2d Artillery, July 1, 1857; Second Lieutenant 4th Artillery, December 29, 1857; First Lieutenant, April 29, 1861, and Captain, August 14, 1862. He served with the Utah Expedition in 1860, and was Adjutant of his regiment in 1861, having previously served on the Atlantic Coast and at West Point. Before his appointment in the Volunteer Service he went through the Peninsular Campaign of 1862, serving as Aide-de-camp to Brevet Major-General P. St. G. Cooke.

He was appointed Colonel of the 16th Connecticut Volunteers on August 24, 1862, and although the regiment had just been organized, it was present, with him in command of it, at the battle of Antietam, September 17, 1862, where it did good service, and suffered severely. He was brevetted Major for gallant and meritorious services in that battle.

He afterwards commanded a brigade in front of Norfolk, Va., and in April and May, 1863, participated in the engagements that took place in front of that position, always doing good service.

In December, 1863, he commanded a brigade in the Eighteenth Corps, and in January, 1864, he was sent to North Carolina. He was engaged in the defence of Plymouth, N. C., April 17-20, 1864, and was there taken prisoner. He was exchanged on June 12, 1864. For gallant and meritorious services in the defence of Plymouth he was brevetted Lieut.-Colonel.

From the date of his exchange until the end of the war, he filled various responsible positions, and then returned to the command of his company in the Fourth Artillery.

His health was broken by his Peninsular Campaign, and failed utterly on several occasions, until finally he was retired from active service on August 22, 1871.

He died in New York, after a severe and lingering illness, on the 5th of February, 1873. He was lovingly and tenderly cared for by those dearest to him during his illness, and died with the firm hope of a blessed resurrection. His funeral took place at Hartford, Conn., on Feb. 8, and was attended by many with whom he had served, among whom were commanding officers, comrades, and soldiers of his regiment.

Although Col. Beach's short record as a soldier is one of which any graduate of the Academy might be proud, yet he has qualities additional to those of the soldier, which endeared him to his friends to a degree not often attained.

His wit was of the brightest, his humor was of the richest, and many of his sayings remain as household words among his friends in the Army. These qualities, with his generous and genial disposition, will long keep his memory green among his comrades, and the Army can ill spare such men.

(Major-General W. B. Franklin.)

DAVID H. VINTON.

No. 299—CLASS OF 1822.

Died Feb. 21, 1873, at Stamford, Conn., aged 70.

GENERAL DAVID H. VINTON, of the U. S. Army, died at his residence, in Stamford, Connecticut, of pneumonia, after a brief illness. He was a native of Providence, R. I., where he was born on the 4th of May, 1803. He was an elder brother of the Rev. Dr. Vinton, whose death is noticed in this necrology, and also of Alexander Vinton, of Boston. An elder brother, John Rogers Vinton, of the Third Artillery, was killed during the siege of Vera Cruz.

In the summer of 1822, he was graduated fourteenth in his class, at the Military Academy at West Point, and then entered the Fourth Artillery. In that service he remained until the next year, when he was transferred to the infantry. He was ordnance officer at Fort Atkinson, in Iowa, until 1825, when he joined the Artillery-practice School at Fortress Monroe, and remained there about three years.

Subsequently, whilst on duty in Florida, Lieutenant Vinton acted as Quarter-master, and so satisfactory were his services, that he was made Quarter-master General of Florida, in 1837. He was employed in similar duty the next year, on the northern frontier of New York, and during the Canadian disturbances. In the same service he was employed at different points, until the winter of 1846, when he became Chief Quarter-master on the Staff of General Wool, with the rank of Major, and served with that officer in Mexico. In 1848, he was sent to the Pacific coast, and in 1851, he was Chief Quartermaster of the Department of the West, the headquarters of which were at St. Louis. With the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, he engaged in the same duties in Texas, in 1856, and was surrendered to the Confederates in 1861, by General Twiggs. He was then Deputy Quartermaster General.

Very soon after he was exchanged, Lieutenant-Colonel Vinton was brevetted Colonel, and during the civil war, he was Chief Quartermaster at New York, where his services were of the greatest value to the nation. He was brevetted Brigadier-General in 1865, having already received the full commission of Colonel in 1864. In 1866, he became Assistant Quartermaster General, and the same year was placed upon the retired list, being over the age of 62 years. He was one of the most valued and justly trusted officers in the Army.

His long services in the Quartermaster's Department, wherein he always and conspicuously evinced the highest characteristics of a spotless soldier and gentleman, are well known to the Army, and is a fitting remembrance of a most worthy graduate of the Military Academy.

EDWARD JOHNSON.

No. 972—CLASS OF 1838.

Died Feb. 22, 1873, at Richmond, Va., aged 57.

GENERAL EDWARD JOHNSON died at Richmond, Va., on Saturday night, Feb. 22, 1873. He was a native of Chesterfield County, Va., where he was born on the 16th of April, 1816. He was appointed a Cadet at the West Point Military Academy in 1833, from Kentucky, and was graduated in 1838, when he entered the Army as Second Lieutenant under General Zachary Taylor. In 1847, he was brevetted Captain, because of meritorious services in Florida. He received the brevet rank of Major in 1848, because of his gallant conduct at the storming of Chepultepec, near the City of Mexico, and in the capture of that city. In 1851, he was commissioned a full Captain. For his conduct in the Mexican War, Virginia voted him a sword; so also did the citizens of his native county.

Early in the late Civil War, Captain Johnson resigned his commission, and joined the Army of the Confederates. He was immediately appointed Colonel of the 12th Georgia Regiment, which office he held until 1863, when he was promoted to Brigadier-General. The following year he was commissioned a Major-General. He served in that capacity until May, 1864, when he was made prisoner at Spotsylvania Court-house. After the war he resided most of the time on his farm in Chesterfield County.

General Johnson died at his rooms in Ford's Hotel, Richmond. The General Assembly of Virginia, being in session, passed resolutions and a complimentary preamble, and adjourned out of respect to his memory. His body lay in state at the Capitol in Richmond until the hour of his funeral, which took place at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. His remains were interred in Hollywood Cemetery, in the presence of a large concourse of civil and military officers and citizens.

CARY H. FRY.

No. 769—CLASS OF 1834.

Died March 5, 1873, at San Francisco, Cal., aged 57.

The following order was issued by the Paymaster-General of the Army, upon the death of Colonel Fry :

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

WASHINGTON, March 8, 1873.

It is the painful duty of this office to announce the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Cary H. Fry, Deputy Paymaster-General and Brevet Brigadier-General U. S. Army. He died of pneumonia on the 5th inst., at San Francisco. He graduated at the Military Academy in 1834, entering the 3d Infantry as Brevet Second Lieutenant. He resigned in 1836, but on the breaking out of the Mexican War, aided in raising the 2d Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and was appointed its Major. In the battle of Buena Vista that regiment performed distinguished service. Upon the fall of its Colonel, William McKee, and of its Lieutenant-Colonel, Henry Clay, Jr., he was left in command. General Taylor, in his official report, spoke in warm commendation of his gallantry and good conduct.

He was appointed a Paymaster in 1853. He was Acting Paymaster-General for five or six months in 1862, and has for twenty years performed faithful and honorable service in this department. He received the brevet of Brigadier-General, to date from October 15, 1867, for faithful and meritorious services during the Rebellion.

Full of generous and noble impulses, his native State, Kentucky, has looked with pride upon his career, and will join his numerous friends in sorrow and mourning for his sudden demise.

BENJAMIN ALVORD,
Paymaster-General U. S. Army.

CHARLES M. THRUSTON.

No. 105—CLASS OF 1814.

Died February —, 1873, at Cumberland, Md., aged 77.

GENERAL THRUSTON was born in and appointed a Cadet from the District of Columbia.

He served as a Cadet from Jan. 8, 1813, to July 21, 1814, when he was promoted to Second Lieutenant, Corps of Artillery, and his further promotion in the Army was: to First Lieutenant, Corps of Artillery, April 20, 1818; to First Lieutenant, 3d Artillery, in the reorganization of the Army, June 11, 1821; and to Captain, 3d Artillery, Feb. 17, 1827.

He served in the war of 1812-15, with Great Britain, as Acting Assistant Engineer in erecting temporary defences at Governor's Island, New York Harbor, 1814-15; in garrison at Fort McHenry, Md., 1815-18; as Battalion Adjutant of Artillery, 1818-21; as Adjutant, 3d Artillery, 1821-27; in garrison at Fort Severn, Md., 1827, Fort Trumbull, Conn., 1827-33, and Fortress Monroe, Va., 1833-35; in the Florida war, 1835-6, being Acting Adjutant-General of the Florida Army, February to May, 1836, and was engaged in the combat of Olokikaha, March 31st.

He resigned in 1835, and resided thereafter at Cumberland, Md., where he was President of the Mineral Bank of Cumberland, Md., 1838-41, and Mayor of Cumberland, 1861-2.

At the commencement of the late civil war, Mr. Thruston entered the Volunteer service as Brigadier-General, and served in guarding the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, 1861-2, resigning April 17th, 1862.

After this latter date, until his death, Gen. Thruston resided on his farm at Cumberland.

A more worthy and extended notice should be presented of General Thruston, but that promised by his son, George A. Thruston, Esq. (member of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy in 1872), has been delayed too long for present publication, owing to his continued illness.

(Secretary of the Association.)

 WILLIAM J. SARTLE.

No. 2197—CLASS OF 1867.

Died January 27, 1873, at Santa Fe, New Mexico, aged 29 years.

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM J. SARTLE graduated at the United States Military Academy in June, 1867, and was commissioned as Second Lieutenant in the 15th U. S. Infantry, then on duty in Alabama. In May, 1868, he was promoted to First Lieutenant, and appointed as Regimental Adjutant in August, 1869, which position he held up to the time of his death. Owing to his energetic zeal and his perfect knowledge of official papers and duties, he was shortly after selected as the Acting-Assistant Adjutant-General of the District of New Mexico.

He was a native of Vermont, and a protégé of the Hon. Judge Poland.

His many noble qualities, his generous disposition, and unsullied character had endeared him to the hearts of a large circle of personal friends, and in his death we have lost one of the bravest, truest men that ever entered the service. Within two years prior to his death, while hundreds of miles away from his post on detached service, the dread destroyer entered his household, and took from him his beloved wife, whom he had left a few days before in perfect health.

This bereavement left him almost heart-broken, and with an infant son to care for, the days passed slowly and sadly away, and when in a few short months the death of his father followed, then his strength gave way. Father, mother, and wife taken from him, his cup of sorrow was filled to overflowing, and his sufferings, both mental and physical, caused reason to forsake its throne, and, in an unhappy moment, he yielded up his soul to the God who gave it.

May He, in His infinite mercy, soften the blow to his orphan sister, and care for and protect her, and the orphan boy committed to her charge, until they are called to meet him in the home beyond the skies where sorrow is turned into joy, and labor to everlasting rest.

(Lieutenant Oliver E. Wood, 5th U. S. Artillery.)

ABRAHAM VAN BUREN.

No. 506—CLASS OF 1827.

Died March 15, 1873, at New York City, aged 66.

COLONEL ABRAHAM VAN BUREN, the eldest son of Martin Van Buren, the eighth President of the United States, died March 15, 1873, at his residence in New York city. He was born November 27, 1807, at Kinderhook, Columbia County, N. Y., and received his preliminary education at Greenville Academy, Greene County, N. Y.

Before he was sixteen years old he entered the U. S. Military Academy, from which he was graduated July 1, 1827, and promoted in the Army to be Brevet Second Lieutenant of Infantry. Attached to the 2d Regiment, in which he was commissioned a full Second Lieutenant, ranking from July 1, 1827, he served two years in garrison at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., and Fort Dearborn, Ill. So wonderful are our changes of less than half a century, that the former, then a large frontier post, is now a suburb of the great city of St. Louis; and the latter, then in a vast wilderness, from which an Indian courier was sent once a week some two hundred miles for letters at the nearest post-office, is the present site of Chicago, where a dozen concentrating railroads teem with almost hourly mails to the 300,000 inhabitants.

Van Buren, from May 4, 1829, to July 4, 1836, was an Aide-de-camp to Major-General Macomb, at the headquarters of the General-in-Chief in Washington city, except for a few months in 1836, when he left the gay circles of the capital to serve as a volunteer on the staff of General Scott in the pestilential swamps of Florida against the Seminole Indians. In the meanwhile, March 4, 1833, when the 1st Dragoons were substituted for the Mounted Rangers, he was appointed a First Lieutenant in this regiment, and July 4, 1836, promoted to be Captain.

Upon his father's elevation to the Presidency of the United States, he resigned his commission, March 3, 1837, to become his private secretary. At this time his father was a widower and he a bachelor; but in November of the year following, Major Van Buren married Miss Angelica Singleton, of Sumter District, South Carolina, at her parents' residence, and soon after removed to the Executive Mansion, where she had first been presented under the auspices of her celebrated cousin, Mrs. Madison, and Senator William C. Preston, whose family she was then visiting. From this time till the end of President Van Buren's administration, his courteous and polished son and his affable and accomplished daughter-in-law gracefully did the social honors of the White House, and materially aided the Chief Magistrate in dispensing his generous and elegant hospitality. Besides these society duties, while holding his place of secretary, the Major inspired his father with the greatest confidence in his good sense, discretion, and perfect temper. On him the President mainly relied to bring him daily reports of the proceedings in Congress, and was often more influenced by his son's opinions than by those of older politicians and more distinguished men.

Major and Mrs. Van Buren, after March 4, 1841, lived with his father at Lindenwald through several years of his retirement, passing much of the winter months with the Singletons in South Carolina.

On the breaking out of the war with Mexico, though Major Van Buren was living in ease and affluence, like most graduates of the Military Academy, he felt it his duty to tender his sword in the service of his country; consequently he re-entered the Army June 26, 1846, receiving the commission of Major in the Pay Department. He at once joined General Taylor's Army in Mexico, but the duties of his position did not satisfy his military cravings, hence we see him actively engaged in the battle of Monterey, where, says his commander, he "served near my person, and was ever prompt in all situations in the communication of my orders and instructions." Subsequently, as a volunteer on the staff of General Scott, he participated in every contest on the triumphal march from Vera Cruz to the capital of the Montezumas. Of him, says his distinguished chief, "Major Van Buren, as paymaster, made the campaign of Mexico with me, and although encumbered with a military chest containing money and vouchers amounting to millions, he never failed at the first gun to hasten, mounted, to me as a volunteer aid, and gallantly rode through every battle, a bearer of orders, with his accustomed quiet smile and amiability. The lieutenant-colonelcy given him at the end of the war was the adequate reward of such heroism." After the war, till June 1, 1854, when he again resigned from the Army, he continued on paymaster's duty in the city of New York.

Upon leaving the military service, he continued to reside in New York, except while attending, till 1859, to his planting interests near Columbia, S. C., and his three years' absence in Europe superintending the education of his sons.

His campaign in Mexico had so shattered his health that a few days after his return, while riding on the Bloomingdale road in New York, he fell from his horse during a sudden attack of paralysis, from which he partially recovered, when a year after he had a second. Though much improved in health by his journey abroad and horseback exercise, of which he was very fond, in the supervision of his South Carolina plantation, he never fully recovered the complete control of his locomotion and organs of speech. The afternoon before his death, he drove out to Central Park and spent the evening at the Union Club, of which he was a much esteemed member. On returning home, about ten o'clock, he complained of a headache and pains in his arm and side, but these passed away, and, a few moments before he breathed his last, he had the prospect of a comfortable night. At two in the morning his wife was suddenly aroused by his cry to her, but before she could reach his bedside, he died of apoplexy, and his gentle spirit had gone to its final rest.

Colonel Van Buren was a brave soldier, tried on many battle fields; a worthy citizen, true in all the relations of life, and an upright Christian, with "a tear for pity and a hand open as day for melting charity." He was modest and unassuming, possessing winning simplicity of manner, and was ever the courteous, genial gentleman. His temper was pre-eminently mild and sweet, never ruffled by enmity nor disturbed by irascible emotion. His intercourse was cordial, cheerful, and sincere, but always dignified and respectful. Though decided in his convictions, he was reserved in his utterances, rarely expressing an adverse opinion. His judgment was excellent and his prescience of political tendencies most remarkable. His heart was the residence of warm affection, and glowed with sympathy for the wants and sufferings of others. His loyalty to his friends was proverbial, and he never spoke of his superiors with whom he had served except in terms of the highest appreciation. A marked illustration of his fidelity was his abandonment of a tour to Europe to give testimony in favor of General Scott when before a Court of Inquiry at Frederick, Md., and volunteering as a secretary to aid in preparing his old commander's defence. With so many virtuous qualities, it is not surprising that he was a great favorite with intimates who appreciated the kindness and urbanity of his manners, and the sincerity, generosity, and benevolence of his heart, and that he should be lovingly valued in his home, where he was the most dutiful of sons, the tenderest of husbands, and the most affectionate of parents.

“ Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife,
Stranger to civil and religious rage
The good man walk'd innocuous through his age ;
* * * * He knew no schoolman's subtle art,
No language but the language of the heart.
By nature honest, by experience wise,
Healthy by temp'rance and by exercise ;
His life, though long, to [sadness] pass'd unknown,
His death was instant, and without a groan.”

(Brevet Major-General George W. Cullum).

EDWARD R. S. CANBY.

No. 30—CLASS OF 1839.

Died April 11, 1873, in the “Lava Beds,” Northern California, aged 55 years.

THE death of General Canby by the hand of a treacherous savage was a shock to the nation. Its announcement to those who knew him came as comes the lightning's flash and thunder clap when the skies are cloudless and nature wears her serenest aspect.

In the pride of his strength, beloved by his friends, respected by all, he was stricken down in the midst of his labors, leaving to us an example to be honored, and a memory to be cherished.

The death of a man who has borne himself so nobly in all the relations and duties of life, bequeaths a legacy of priceless value to the living, and those who mourn his untimely death will love to think of his goodness as a man and his wonderful excellence as an officer.

It is not the intention here to give in narrative an account of General Canby's life, but the writer would fain collect a few of the articles published in different parts of the country at the time of his death, and present them together as a chaplet on the altar of his memory.

The offering could be made more imposing, the material for it has been wrought by many hands, and is abundant; but it better suits the modest worth of Canby, his gentle, unpretending nature, to make the offering a simple one. It suffices for the myrtle wreath, 'Tis not for Glory's crown.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

WASHINGTON, April 14, 1873.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 3.

It again becomes the sad duty of the General to announce to the Army the death of one of our most illustrious and most honored comrades.

Brigadier-General Edward R. S. Canby, commanding the Department of the Columbia, was, on Friday last, April 11, shot dead by the chief "Jack," while he was endeavoring to mediate for the removal of the Modocs from their present rocky fastness on the northern border of California to a reservation where the tribe could be maintained and protected by the proper civil agents of the Government.

That such a life should have been sacrificed in such a cause will ever be a source of regret to his relations and friends; yet the General trusts that all good soldiers will be consoled in knowing that General Canby lost his life "on duty" and in the execution of his office, for he had been specially chosen and appointed for this delicate and dangerous trust by reason of his well-known patience and forbearance, his entire self-abnegation and fidelity to the expressed wishes of his Government, and his large experience in dealing with the savage Indians of America.

He had already completed the necessary military preparations to enforce obedience to the conclusions of the Peace Commissioners, after which he seems to have accompanied them to a last conference with the savage chiefs in supposed friendly council, and there met his death by treachery, outside of his military lines, but within view of the signal station. At the same time one of the Peace Commissioners was killed outright, and another mortally wounded, and the third escaped unhurt.

Thus perished one of the kindest and best gentlemen of this or any country, whose social equaled his military virtues. To even sketch his Army history would pass the limits of a General Order, and it must here suffice to state that General Canby began his military career as a cadet at West Point in the summer of 1835, graduating in 1839, since which time he has continuously served thirty-eight years, passing through all the grades to Major-General of Volunteers and Brigadier-General of the Regular Army.

He served his early life with marked distinction in the Florida and Mexican wars, and the outbreak of the civil war found him on duty in New Mexico, where, after the defection of his seniors, he remained in command and defended the country successfully against a formidable inroad from the direction of Texas. Afterwards transferred East to a more active and important sphere, he exercised various high commands, and at the close of the civil war was in chief command of the Military Division of the West Mississippi, in which he had received a painful wound, but had the honor to capture Mobile and compel the surrender of the rebel forces in the Southwest.

Since the close of the civil war he has repeatedly been chosen for special command by reason of his superior knowledge of law and civil government, his known fidelity to the wishes of the Executive, and his chivalrous devotion to his profession, in all which his success was perfect.

When fatigued by a long and laborious career, in 1869 he voluntarily consented to take command of the Department of the Columbia, where he expected to enjoy the repose he so much coveted. This Modoc difficulty arising last winter, and it being extremely desirous to end it by peaceful means, it seemed almost providential that it should have occurred in the sphere of General Canby's command.

He responded to the call of his Government with alacrity, and has labored with a patience that deserved better success—but, alas! the end is different from that which he and his best friends had hoped for, and he now lies a corpse in the wild mountains of California, while the lightning flashes his requiem to the furthestmost corners of the civilized world.

Though dead, the record of his fame is resplendent with noble deeds well done, and no name on our Army Register stands fairer or higher for the personal qualities that command the universal respect, honor, affection, and love of his countrymen.

General Canby leaves to his country a heart-broken widow, but no children.

Every honor consistent with law and usage shall be paid to his remains, full notice of which shall be given as soon as his family can be consulted and arrangements concluded.

By command of General Sherman :

WILLIAM D. WHIPPLE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

General Canby was a remarkable instance of an officer of high rank and universal popularity, without enemies in his profession. It was very rare that you could hear a criticism of him among his brother officers. He had little ambition beyond his duty, was always satisfied, or appeared to be, with any position to which he was assigned; and never engaged in any of those squabbles or intrigues for preferment which deform the records of many able soldiers. He had a singular power of inspiring the most perfect trust and confidence among those who served under his command. His subordinates considered him infallible, and this feeling had much to do with the perfect discipline which he always, apparently without effort, exercised wherever he went. He was the ideal of the thoughtful and studious soldier, a man rather of the type of Moltke than of Murat. He was tall, slender, severe and silent. His love of order and regularity was one of his distinguishing traits. He was a martinet of the best school, because he appreciated the fact that only by the strictest attention to details could general results be achieved.

To bores or impertinents he was terrible in his sternness and dignity. To people who sought him on official business he was courteous, but never cordial. To his friends, to those who had gained the right to his intimacy, he was unaffectedly genial and open-hearted. His reticence and reserve prevented him from gaining that sympathetic popularity which fell to many lesser men. Yet he had friends enough to keep his memory green, and they know that the service owned no truer or abler soldier, and that the country contained no more sincerely patriotic citizen.—N. Y. Tribune.

General Canby was not only a well-educated soldier, but a man of fine literary attainments and of general culture and refinement. In his personal appearance he was tall, graceful, and commanding, having a fine military bearing. In disposition he was remarkable for his reticence, his modesty, gentleness, and extreme refinement and delicacy of feeling. As an evidence of this delicacy we have just been shown by Colonel Bullock an army order, issued from General Canby's head-quarters at the time of the surrender of General R. Taylor, in which the subordinate officer who had drawn it had used the word "leniency" in referring to the treatment of the people. General Canby, in revising the order when it passed through his hands, crossed out the humiliating word "leniency" and substituted with his own hand the gentler terms "discretion and respect." General Taylor in his order of capitulation, a copy of which we have just seen, assures his command that General Canby will be found liberal and just, animated by an honest desire to do all in his power to prevent unnecessary hardship and suffering.—Louisville Commercial.

It is not likely that this generation of Americans can ever know how good and how great a man they have lost in General Canby. He was one of those symmetrical great men whom Jeremy Taylor would have described as "choicely good," in whom no power nor passion is inordinate, who have a sort of genius for seeing always what is exactly right, and a steady propensity for doing it; and who, being fastidious, reticent, and perfectly poised, never push themselves into the knowledge of anybody, and who are most commonly appreciated only by their friends and by history.—Christian Union.

IN MEMORIAM.

A brave soldier has fallen. A good man has gone from among us. General Canby was so well beloved by those who knew him, that few words of tongue or pen are needed to commemorate his virtues. Among men he was a tower of silent strength, as much above the average of those around him as some lofty mountain peak is above the plains at its base. He was so exact in his dealings, so upright in his business transactions, that in all the years of his life no man ever doubted General Canby's integrity. He was of majestic presence. His manner was full of fine courtesy that was no superficial polish, but the natural outgrowth of a pure and loyal heart. It was marked by a calm dignity, indicative of depth and strength, far removed from ostentation or austerity, and reminding one of the inward light shining through the vase which contains it. There was something almost pathetic in the rare traits which formed General Canby's character—some which should have suggested to us that his life would have no common end. Without affectation, full of strength and intellect, he was as gentle and simple-minded as a little child, and the manner of his death is only a proof of his courage, his kindness, and his self-abnegation. He leaves a widow, but no children. Like that other patriot-soldier, General George H. Thomas, General Canby will go down to history as the last of his race. No son or daughter will have his name to uphold or dishonor. To his widow will be left the consolation which must come to her in remembering the unspotted record of her noble husband, who, in all the relations of life, was emphatically "without fear and without reproach."

M. R. S.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18, 1873.

Little did I dream, when on a beautiful summer day, in 1854, I received holy baptism at the hands of the Rev. Eleazer Thomas, D. D., and was by him welcomed to the communion of Christ's holy church, that he would one day die by the hands of savage treachery, out among the wild mountains of the West.

That, however, came to pass. The man whom I honored for his Christian fervor and power, and whom I loved as my personal friend, has gone to his reward—the beginning of his upward flight being among the rocks of the wilderness; the end of it where Elijah's journey ended, in heaven. And now the strange movements of God's complicated providence brings this to pass, that I stand to speak the last words before the burial of the remains of Brigadier General E. R. S. Canby, who met his tragic fate in company with the friend of my youth. Is it strange that my memory speeds with swift feet over the long, circuitous path which runs from this event to that, and that in my thought to-day, this burial in death and that other burial in baptism stand side by side? How strange it is—like the weird combinations in some of our fantastic dreams. This, however, is no dream. The unnaturalness of this "taking off" might almost make it seem the horrid vision of some fevered night. It is so marvellous that treachery should thus assault friendship; that murder should strike the peacemakers. At first we could scarcely believe it true. But it is all real. These weeds of widowhood; this beautiful casket for which death furnishes the jewel; these sad dirges; these cries to God out of our distress; these honors to the distinguished dead, and by some of the nation's distinguished living representatives,—all this but enlarges our conception of the horrible reality of the death which calls us together to-day. For the sake of these stricken mourners, for the Army's sake, which, in the death of General Canby loses one of its bravest, wisest, and ablest officers; for the nation's sake, which in him loses one of her noblest sons; yea, for the Indians' sake, who are held responsible for this dark deed, I could wish it were all a dream. But it is not. And yet realities have this advantage over dreams; dreams teach us nothing; realities, however dread and awful, still come to us as school-masters. They have a voice and wisdom for those who will listen for instruction. Let us listen a moment to-day. I regret that I had not the honor and advantage of a personal acquaintance with the distinguished dead, whose obsequies now occupy us. From what I know of him, however, I am impressed, first of all, with this, that true merit is very often little known until the possessor of it dies. His virtue is unostentatious, his deeds are wrought in silence and often in obscurity. His great work so engrosses him that he has neither time nor inclination to proclaim it. It is not until the workman disappears, and his work stands out, vast and clearly outlined, that men begin to study the might that wrought such wonders. The world has built many a monument to men it scarcely heard of till they were dead. General Canby's character was by no means obscure, and yet was, I judge, of this general type. Many of us knew his name; a few knew his merit. It was not until this tragedy threw him out on the gaze of mankind, as rockets clear the sky, that men inquired particularly about him. For him to be conspicuous, however, was to command a recognition of his virtue, and his royal merit. As we begin to inquire we are all coming now to know what his intimate friends perfectly understood before, that he was a man of tireless industry, of vast culture in his profession, brave as a lion, and tender as he was brave; his sense of honor almost excessive; as profoundly sincere in his opinions and feelings as he was honest in his transactions; pure in speech and irreproachable in life; possessing silence, which is golden, and a clear, strong thinking power which is equally so; a man able to command and govern, and win the favor of the governed; wise in counsel; brave in war; strong in administration; a man conscious of his power, therefore to be trusted in critical junctures, and who, more than once, during the war and afterward, brought order out of chaos in the fields to which he was assigned. He has for years been known throughout the Army as a model soldier, and the conspicuity of his death is attracting the attention of the nation to the same fact. It is strange that his merit has not been more widely known before now! The explanation is doubtless to be found in the peculiar type of his power—a power that was constant rather than conspicuous; so absorbed as to be unconscious of its comparative obscurity; satisfied to do and leave posterity to estimate the doing. Thus true merit is often unrecognized in part until men are gone. Sometimes indeed it is not recognized anywhere except in heaven, where the obscure toiler is lifted to a place of honor among the sons of God. This, however, and itself, are virtue's ample reward. I am reminded to-day that what we reverence after all is character—broad, strong, noble character. We have ready applause for brilliant deeds, and are not slow to admire genius, and yet the thing which most commands our profound and abiding reverence is not the flash of some brilliant achievement, but the steady, strong, broad progress of noble character. And this is the kind of power with which the memory of General Canby comes to us to-day. He was great in war, and good, and equally so in peace. There are no private discounts to reduce the excellency and glory of his public record. It were well for the nation if the same tribute could be laid at the feet of all her mighty sons, as I believe it can be laid at the feet of some. The character of the man who lies before us now, reminds us that among the nation's distinguished men, there always have been, and still are men, whose integrity none can impeach. The thought is full of comfort. Our ideas upon the subject have of late been sadly confused. So many conspicuous men have betrayed such a want of profound and delicate moral conviction, while some have been detected in such vast schemes of doubtful self-emolument, that a little shadow has fallen upon the class, and men have asked, "Who can be trusted?" But this is only the seeming of a sad moment. The ship has just touched the rocks; we felt the shock, and in our sudden fright we cried, "All is lost!" Not so. General Canby has walked through thirty years of broad opportunities for self-seeking, and never in one instance has exposed himself to even a suspicion of wrong-doing. His hands are clean. Even the tongue of slander has never ventured, I believe, upon the experiment of defamation. He has stood against the dash and roar of dishonest schemes and schemers, as

Gibraltar against the sea. So marvellously just has been his administration that even Richmond, Virginia, where he for some time governed a subjugated people, called a public meeting and passed resolutions of high respect for the dead, and of profound sympathy for his surviving kindred. The tribute is remarkable as coming from a people who would naturally be expected to avoid praise even if they could not blame. And he has not been alone in this. Such an example has power, and he has had associates in his manly and soldierly virtues. And now that he has gone, we must not suppose that integrity is enshrouded with him. Such virtue has a self-perpetuating power. "He, being dead, yet speaketh." Soldiers will talk of him as a model, and some will try to emulate his virtues. Public men will see that it is better to go poor with honored praise, than to go by questionable fortune to a splendid burial. Granite blocks make trivial monuments, and are often carved with false words. A man's true monument is the influence which he leaves behind him on mankind. General Canby's is shapely, beautiful, and will last. The thought that he is not alone in his distinguished virtue, and that this is not the funeral of public honor, is full of comfort for these troubled times. It comes like sweet harmony into the discords of public greed and unscrupulousness. For the nation's sake I am glad it is so. Immorality is stronger than empires, and more than one nation which defied external attack, has crumbled through the decay and anarchy of internal corruption. An army of Canbys would be invincible, a nation like him would last forever. He cares not that I speak thus of his virtue. I say it not for him, nor his, for to them it is not new, but for this audience, and, if I could reach all, for the nation.—(Extract, Funeral Sermon, by Rev. Dr. Baylis.)

His remains now rest in "Crown Hill Cemetery," Indianapolis, near to the places of his youth, where live his kindred and the friends of his early days.

(Brevet Maj.-Gen. John P. Hawkins.)

GEORGE M. HARRIS.

No. 2263—CLASS OF 1868.

Died, May 11th, 1873, of wounds received in action with Modoc Indians.
Aged 27.

LIEUTENANT GEORGE M. HARRIS was born in Philadelphia, in 1846. In 1863 he was appointed a Cadet at the U. S. Military Academy, and upon graduation, in 1868, he was appointed a Second Lieutenant in the 10th Infantry; was unassigned from May 19th, to July 14th, 1869, during the re-organization of the Army, when he was transferred to the 4th Artillery, in which regiment he remained till his death. While in the 10th Infantry he served in Minnesota, at Fort Ripley, and in Texas against outlaws, and on registration duty during the reconstruction of that State, and in the 4th Artillery, at Fort Delaware, Fort Macon, Presidio of San Francisco, and in the Lava Beds, in the campaign against the Modocs.

As a Cadet, his generous and manly nature and genial disposition won for him the love and respect of his fellow-members of the Corps; and, in matters of responsibility and judgment, his independent, upright character, no less than his personal popularity, made him the choice of his class. In athletic exercises he took a hearty interest, and was Captain and stroke-oar of the running crew in the first race ever rowed by Cadets.

During his brief life in the Army he performed his duty conscientiously and well, and showed himself, in nature and inclination, a thorough soldier. The posts at which he was stationed, were isolated and small; and yet, though offered advantageous positions in civil life, he preferred to remain in the profession for which he was educated and for which he was so well fitted.

When, finally, during the operations of the Modoc war, he was called upon to take part in that gallant but disastrous reconnoissance, which cost the country the lives of so many brave men, he went boldly in, and, with enthusiastic courage, led on his men to their common death and glory. It was then that he received his mortal wound, and, for a week after, held on to life only by his iron constitution, and his determination to live to see his mother, in whom his affection seemed concentrated. The bravest are the tenderest, and this tender, holy sentiment graced well his heroic death.

From the time he was wounded he never uttered a complaint or reproach, and when the final moment came, conscious that he had done his duty, he died peacefully and happy, and with Christian hope, in the presence of his mother and brother, and surrounded by the soldiers of his Company, who loved him as brave men love one who is courageous, modest and kind.

His friends were many; and many a heart was sad, and many an eye, unused to tears, was moist when the news came that Harris was no more; and with their sorrow was heartfelt sympathy for those near and dear to him in their great affliction. They and the Army can point with pride to his life as unsullied with dishonor, and bright with all that is noble and good.

ARTHUR BRANSTON.

No. 1920—CLASS OF 1867.

Killed in action with Modoc Indians, April 16th, 1873.

“Sixty-six” has yet another loss to mourn, for he was ours by date of admission and the companionship of four long years of Cadet life.

A soldier in every instinct of his nature, the echoes of Sumter’s guns were barely hushed before his name was inscribed among the first of Ohio's Volunteers, and, boy though he was in years, a commission as First Lieutenant speedily followed.

Thrown upon his own resources in early life, self-taught, self-supported, he knew that in the profession of his choice his surest road to success lay in the education of West Point, and all his energies were taxed to win from among an overcrowded list of applicants the prize of a cadetship. Prominent among the officers of his regiment for efficiency and devotion to duty, winning the respect and honor of all, his claim met with warm endorsement, and in June, 1862, Cranston and the Class of 1866 fell in together for the four years' struggle.

It is needless to recount the details of the old Cadet days, or of his record in service after graduation. If ever man left the Academy at the close of his course without an enemy it was he. Frank, fearless, honorable and unselfish, proud of his profession and devoted to its interests, Cranston entered the Fourth Artillery with every hope of winning distinction and reward. How well he performed his duties, how earnestly and with what enthusiasm he gave his best efforts to the instruction and improvement of his men, and the addition of new laurels to his regiment, his comrades in garrison and in the field bear willing and glowing testimony; how gallantly and unflinchingly he met his death, shot down in ambuscade by savage foe, we have no need of proof.

Of all the officers of the devoted little band that met the Modocs on that disastrous day not one now remains to tell the story. Through the widely scattered garrisons of the Army, through hundreds of peaceful home circles, all hearts are stricken with horror at their tragic fate, and there are firesides where grief reigns in depth and bitterness too sacred for allusion even faint as this; but among classmates and comrades of Sixty-six, whose numbers have already felt such fatal drain, whose names are fading from the rolls with every year, and among the army of our alumni, still another name is mourned in submissive sadness, that of Arthur Cranston.

HENRY C. DODGE.

No. 2013—CLASS OF 1863.

Drowned about Jan. 27th, 1873, in Queen Charlotte's Sound, aged 30.

LIEUT. H. C. DODGE was born in, and appointed a Cadet from, the State of New York. Graduating in 1863, he was at once ordered to his battery serving in the Army of the Potomac, where he performed honorable and faithful service till June, 1864; being then ordered to the defences of Washington, where he served till the close of the war. Soon after, in September, 1865, his regiment being ordered to California, we find him on duty first at Presidio, then Fort Stevens, and Portland, Oregon, and finally at Sitka, Alaska. In the fall of 1872 he hailed with pleasure the welcome news that his regiment was ordered to an Eastern Station. Thoughts of a soon and hearty welcome to the bosom of his family in Auburn, and the meeting of a host of expectant friends, all combined to raise pleasurable anticipations for social enjoyments in which he so much delighted, and of which he had so long been deprived; in the immediate realization of these anticipations, however, he was to be disappointed, being detained in the settlement of accounts and turning over of property. At last, on about Jan. 20th, 1873, in company with his friend, Major Walker, he takes passage for Portland, Oregon, in the ill-fated steamer, George S. Wright, which is supposed to have been lost in or near Queen Charlotte's Sound, about Jan. 27, 1873, with all on board.

Another friend has left us, true and kind,
 Another comrade, who shall long be mourned ;
 Whose quiet, modest spirit, steadfast mind,
 His life with real integrity adorned .
 A wanderer for years at duty's post,
 Bright hopes were picturing his quick return ;
 But those in vain shall watch who loved him most,
 In vain for him the glowing home-fire burn.

Laden with lives, the little steamer perished ;
 And of her dreadful fate no tidings came ;
 But of that noble friend by all so cherished,
 Is nothing left for memory but a name ?
 No! Comrades, family, friends, their tribute give.
 No cold inscription need record his worth ;
 In warm and faithful hearts it long shall live
 Enshrined while loving friends remain on earth.

JACOB ALMY.

No. 2196.—CLASS OF 1867.

Killed by Indians, May 27, 1873, Arizona Ter., aged 37.

LIEUTENANT JACOB ALMY was born in New Bedford, Mass., December 21, 1842. He served during the war of the rebellion in the Thirty-third Regiment of Infantry of the Massachusetts Volunteers, and was one of those selected from the Volunteer service by President Lincoln for appointment to the Military Academy.

He was a graduate of the Class of 1867, and was assigned to a company of the 5th Cavalry, then serving in Tennessee. Accompanying his regiment to Nebraska, in 1868, he participated in the campaign then in progress against the hostile bands of Sioux, and was present at the engagement of Summit Springs, in 1869.

He accompanied the regiment to Arizona, in 1871, and commanded his company during the winter campaign of 1872-73. At its close he was placed in charge of the Indian scout at the San Carlos reservation, and while upon this duty was brutally murdered by one of the reservation Indians, May 17th, 1873. (Lieut. George B. Davis.)

Of the foregoing, five were members of the Association (Gen. Thayer, Gen. Vinton, Gen. Bache, Mr. Van Buren, and Dr. Vinton).

				WEST POINT, N. Y. June 12, 1873. (Signed) H. L. KENDRICK, Treasurer.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS was next in order.

The following resolutions were adopted :

Resolved, (Upon motion of General Franklyn)

That Article II of the Constitution of the Association be amended, so as to substitute for the words, "our Alma Mater," the words, the Military Academy at West Point.

Resolved, (Motion of Rev. C. C. Parsons)

That it be referred to the Executive Committee to consider what steps should be taken to place at West Point a suitable memorial of General Sylvanus Thayer, sometime Superintendent of the Military Academy; and that the Committee be instructed to report at the next meeting of the Association.

The following motion (by General Viele) was tabled after some discussion :

Moved, That a committee of three be appointed to make a design to represent this scene of our Academy, to be used as a badge or certificate, by the members of the Association.

During the remarks called forth by the second resolution, General Daniel Tyler spoke at length of the services of General Thayer at the Military Academy, and matters of interest connected with his time as Superintendent.

General Thomas Davies stated that when the Committee were ready to commence operations and called for the money, he would give $500 towards the Thayer memorial.

General Daniel Tyler made a similar offer.

The Chairman then announced the officers of the Association for the ensuing year—

President, Mr. SIMON WILLARD, Boston, Mass.

Treasurer, PROFESSOR H. L. KENDRICK, LL. D., West Point, N. Y.

Secretary, LIEUTENANT E. H. TOTTEN, First Artillery, West Point, N. Y.

JUDGE R. P. PARROTT, Cold Spring, N. Y.

PROFESSOR A. E. CHURCH, LL. D., West Point, N. Y.

GENERAL GEORGE W. CULLUM, New York City.

GENERAL THOMAS H. RUGER, West Point, N. Y.

GENERAL EMORY UPTON, West Point, N. Y.

The Chairman presented an invitation to the Graduates to lunch with the Superintendent immediately upon adjourning; and one from the "Cadet Hop Managers," to the "Graduation Hop," in the evening.

There being no further business before the Meeting, after benediction had been pronounced by the Chaplain, it was declared adjourned.

THE ANNUAL DINNER.

Immediately after the Meeting, the Graduates proceeded to the quarters of the Superintendent of the Military Academy, where they were cordially received by General and Mrs. Ruger, and very handsomely entertained. Later they witnessed a skirmish drill by the Cadets, and received a Review, and then proceeded to Cozzans' Hotel for the regular dinner, which was served about seven o'clock.

Each year, as our members increase, more inconvenience is experienced in having the dinner away from West Point. It, doubtless, will be served next year in the Cadet Mess Hall. Professor Charles Davies presided at the dinner, with Mr. Willard on his right.

Just before the regular toasts were announced, Mr. Simon Willard was called upon, and made the following remarks :

FELLOW GRADUATES :

According to the rules of this, our Society, the oldest Member becomes President. By the death of my respected predecessor, I am eligible to the situation, but age, which has, so far, qualified me for the dignity, has, by the many infirmities it has brought in its train, utterly unfitted me for accepting the honor—the spirit is willing, but the flesh is altogether too weak. I am physically too feeble to undergo the fatigue which the position would require, and must resign in favor of some younger and more competent man.

Youth will not remain always with us, nor health nor strength, and I never was more impressed with the truism, than when I saw the young Cadets trotting off the Parade-Ground yesterday at the double-quick. There is no double-quick for the remnant of the Class of 1813 but one, and that is taking them off Life's Parade-Ground full quick enough; yet, it is a pleasant thing to see the Cadet of to-day, young, strong, and active, marching on to the field, with full band, perfect drill, completely accoutred, and with martial accompaniments, and compare him with the Cadet of 1813.

He followed a single snare-drum to Evening Parade; his Officer of the Day flourished a borrowed sword; if he got into trouble, was put under arrest, and his sword confiscated, the whole Class mourned and was exceedingly sad, for a sword was a valuable possession and not easily come by—there was community of interest in that sword. That Cadet foraged the country to supply his commissariat, and the country people frequently imagined that the Cadet was learning how to live on the enemy; he kept from freezing by cutting his own fuel in the neighboring forest, and packing it home on his own back. The art of war was not very accurately taught, the idea fairly lodged in his brain being, "wherever you see an enemy hit him;" but he made a tolerably fair show in the world, and the country has grown no smaller on his account.

If the Cadet of 1813 did nothing else, he came very near changing the location of West Point Academy. With patriotic thought, intent, and mind filled with fiery visions of rockets, serpents, squibs and crackers, his teeming brain conceived the idea of controlling the Powder Magazine, to the end that he might then and there concoct the explosives wherewith to celebrate the Nation's birthday and make the Fourth of July, 1814, ever memorable.

He very nearly did it! I think I can see that hilarious but indiscreet crew now, sitting at the door of the Magazine, with twenty barrels of powder behind them, and all sorts of devilish contrivances and infernal devices before them, wherewith to make the following night hideous after the fashion and manner of celebrations from immemorial time. Suddenly the whole inchoate festivity burst into spontaneous combustion, and the gay and festive Cadet of 1813 exhibited a capacity for advancing to the rear, for vacating an untenable position, for rallying upon his supports, that a Xenophon or a Napoleon might have envied.

They stood, not upon the order of their going, but went at once, and it was not the fault of the Class of 1813 that what existed of West Point was not deposited at the bottom of the Hudson. Whether it was several pails of water or the cold perspiration that the Cadet of 1813 burst into, in view of the impending calamity which put out the conflagration, I do not know; but the Pyrotechnic Committee were fished out of the neighboring cellars and depressions of the soil and departed to their quarters, singed, saddened, subdued, if not wiser warriors. They had very nearly taken a lesson in military art not laid down in Hardee, and "been hoist with their own petard."

Although the Class of 1813 did not succeed in changing the destinies of the Academy, it managed to leave a remnant of itself, old, battered and wheezy, which although it cannot serve you as President, still can look on with delighted eyes to see the old place grown up to be a great institution, its Graduates revered and respected by a country they have helped to make great. * Numbering among them one whom the nation has twice delighted to honor, who has led vast armies to victory, who gave peace to a people and a peaceful example to the world—who is our guest to-day. I cannot sit down without giving a remembrancer to the members of the Class of 1813, clever fellows all, getting through their duties as students with some credit, doing their level best as men, and quite likely not so far off now that they cannot echo my heartfelt wish of long life and prosperity to the old West Point Academy.

The following were the regular toasts, prepared by Professor J. B. Wheeler:

OUR COUNTRY.—Prosperous at home, respected abroad; its honor will ever be the dearest object of our hearts.

OUR FLAG.—The emblem of freedom and pride of our people; we will be ever ready "to cherish, protect, and defend it" with our lives.

OUR ALMA MATER.—Her glowing record of names nurtured by her fostering care, and the memory of her kindness to us, will ever inspire us to preserve her reputation without blemish and without reproach.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.—An élève of our Academy; his laurels as a soldier are more than eclipsed by those won as a statesman.

THE ARMY AND NAVY.

THE VOLUNTEER SOLDIERY.—Our defence and safe reliance in times of need. Aided by discipline and experience, they render our nation invincible.

THE DEAD OF THE PAST YEAR.—The laurel is too often o'ershadowed by the cypress; but the immortal shall preserve their memories forever.

OUR ACADEMIC FRIENDSHIPS.—May they ripen with our years, and in these reunions smooth the asperities of life with the associations of youth.

THE LADIES.—The proudest effort of chivalry has ever been to secure "the smile from partial beauty won." However brave in the field and resistless in war, we yield "an unconditional surrender" to their arms.

The above were answered informally. General Tower read the following verses to our Alma Mater, which were received with marked feeling, and immediately demanded by a "resolution," to be printed and presented in this publication.

*In allusion to President Grant, then present, a member of the Association.

ANNUAL REUNION, JUNE 12, 1873.

Dear Alma Mater of our pride!
 Thy golden gates swing open wide,
 To thy children.
 From North and South, from East and West,
 Some heeding thy welcome behest,
 Come trooping in.

All are not here! Full many a name
 Is borne upon the roll of fame,
 Honored and dear:
 Our Foster Mother's noble band
 Of heroes, in the spirit land;
 Seek them not here.

"Dulce est pro patria mori
 Et decorum"—then soldiers why
 Weep the dead brave?
 Whose paths o'er fields of glory lay,
 Finding, where danger led the way,
 The warrior's grave.

Let history the full record tell
 Of those, who in their manhood fell;
 That gallant band,
 Whose sacred mounds lie scattered far,
 From Mexico to Canada,
 On every hand.

Of patriarchs, who had reached the goal
 Of life, ere broke its golden bowl,
 And silver cord;
 Whose sunset left its hallowed ray,
 As silently they passed away,
 With sheathed sword.

Shall we raise here no marble spire,
 In memory of our gifted sire,
 Immortal Thayer?
 Passed that proud spirit, whose great name,
 To yonder Halls, hath lent a fame,
 Eternal there.

Loved Master of Strategic Art,
 Who faithfully fulfilled thy part,
 Within thy sphere.
 Gone to that far bourne, whence returns
 No traveller, thy light still burns,
 For those left here.

Thy "footsteps on the sands of time,"
 Shall lengthen to the farthest clime,
 As welcome guide,
 As those that o'er the snow cliffs bring
 The pilgrim, cold and suffering,
 To the fireside.

The soldier of Christ's ministry,
 The genial Vinton, where is he?
 Gone on before!
 Where is the sting of death, and where
 Its victory, if we but bear
 The cross he bore?

Where courtly Bache, of the old school,
 Who lived up to the golden rule,
 Honored of men?
 'Tis but a short year since he seemed
 So bright and hale, no one but dreamed
 He'd come again.

To the dire summons, heard again,
 Music, with its sad requiem strain,
 Answer'd once more,
 Where by the Schuylkill's sloping wold,
 Was borne the knightly hero's mould,
 His life dream o'er.

And still the dreaded death note comes,
 Reaching the hearths of saddened homes,
 From the far land;
 Comes, with its lightning speed, to tell
 How Canby, with his comrades, fell
 By savage hand.

ANNUAL REUNION, JUNE 12, 1873.

All are not here! O'er many graves,
 The sod its tender leaflet waves,
 In sad sweet bloom.
 Those who, so joyous, left these Halls,
 Have heard, O Death! thy frequent calls
 To the dark tomb.

We, living by kind Fate's decree,
 Heeding the sound of reveille,
 To roll call come;
 Nor longer dread each morrow's sun
 May wake us, with its booming gun,
 Its fife and drum.

All outward cares and griefs forgot,
 Here, over each remembered spot,
 We love to roam;
 No learned savans of dreaded mien,
 With crucial tests, to intervene
 And send us home.

Rest Fancy! from thy onward gaze;
 Call back dear Memory! the days
 Of Auld Lang Syne.
 See! through the vista of long years,
 Each happy youthful face appears,
 With glowing shine.

Alone, each for himself must feel
 These memories o'er him gently steal,
 Like a sweet dream.
 Awaked! The vision's passed away—
 Alas! how careworn, old, and gray,
 Some of us seem.

Time works all changes. The old pile
 Of barracks, to the Gothic style
 Hath yielded place.
 Science expands in roomier halls,
 The telescope, on solid walls,
 Mounts high in space.

Soon shall be heard the rattling car,
 Beneath yon plain with thundering jar,
 Tunnelling through.
 Then quick the eye, on focal glass,
 To catch Heaven's steeds, that prancing pass,
 Across the view.

Ever new wonders! The great coil
 Of Ruhmkorff, with its current toil
 And struggle, gleams
 Electric fire.—Leaps through the dark,
 Its jagged, thirty inches spark,
 In lightning streams.

Its plus and minus poles, beware!
 With both hands never touch the pair;
 Remember well,
 The engineer, too venturous grown,
 By his own petard may be blown,
 Where? Who can tell?

Conception strange! man's fertile brain
 Brings forth the Spectroscope, with train
 Of wondrous Sights:—
 Reveals what makes the great Sun shine,
 Nebulous matter, Stars, in fine
 The Northern Lights.

Through trials, it shall yet prevail,
 To test the Comet's brushy tail,
 And meteor showers.
 The Zodiac's lengthy streaming light,
 When sunset leaves the world in night,
 Shall own its powers.

From morn till eve, from eve to morn,
 Progressive science marches on,
 Revealing law.
 Each age, ere yet its race be run,
 Cries, pointing to the coming one,
 Excelsior!

AUNUAL REUNION, JUNE 12, 1873.

Fair Science! Star of Orient birth!
 Soon may the untaught sons of earth
 Thy light receive.
 Without its rays, the world's dark page,
 As in the pre-historic age,
 No trace would leave.

Thine Mother! 'tis to hold thy place
 Forward, in science's giant race,
 Guiding each son
 In her bright paths, through war and peace
 Till from the earth, war's rumors cease,
 Then thy task's done.

May we, thy children, in the strife
 Of deeds ennobling martial life,
 Not wanting be.
 How, in loved fellowship, we stand,
 Honor and right on either hand,
 Let the world see.

One short word for the crimson bars,
 The white stripes, with the silver stars,
 On a blue field.
 Our Old Flag! under it we brave
 All dangers.—Only to the grave
 Should soldiers yield.

The invited guests present were, Rev. Dr. Forsyth, D. D., Prof. de Janon, Surgeon McParlin, and Col. Church, the Editor of the Army and Navy Journal.

In answer to Dinner Invitations by the Executive Committee, letters of regret were received from Hon. Secretary of State, Hon. Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Secretary of War, Admiral Porter, Prof. Weir, and Hon. Gouverneur Kemble.

The tables were gradually broken up late in the evening, and many of the Graduates took advantage of their invitation to the Cadet Ball, which occupied the buildings of the Officers and Cadets' Mess Hall, and the Academic Building.

Several valuable presents have been made to the Association Records during the past year.

1. From Mr. Simon Willard, Class of 1815, a rare print, framed, of Napoleon and his Marshals; also Halleck's translation of Jomini's "Life of Napoleon."

2. From Mr. Simon S. Fahnestock, Class of 1841, an autograph letter of Patrick Henry.

3. From Mr. William C. Young, Class of 1822, a pamphlet journal of a "Cadet March," in 1819.

4. From Mr. H. A. Thompson, Class of 1859, a sketch of West Point, drawn by Cadet Nat. Loring, of Boston, in 1828.

5. From the Rev. John Forsyth, Chaplain, U. S., M. A., copies of letters relating to the appointment of Professor Berard.

6. Photographs of members and many additions to scrap book, and records, and valuable corrections to the Register of Graduates.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF THE ASSOCIATION OF THE GRADUATES OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I.—THE ASSOCIATION OF THE GRADUATES OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY shall include all the Graduates of that institution who shall have assented to the Constitution and By-Laws.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to cherish the memories of the Military Academy at West Point, and to promote the social intercourse and fraternal fellowship of its Graduates.

ART. III.—Par. 1. The officers of this Association shall consist of a President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of five members.

Par. 2.—The oldest Graduate belonging to the Association shall be the President; and in his absence the senior Graduate present shall preside at the meetings of the Association. The Secretary and Treasurer, to be selected from the officers of the Military Academy, shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer, at each annual meeting, for the ensuing year.

Par. 3.—The Association shall meet annually at West Point, New York, on the 17th of June, whenever that falls on Thursday, otherwise on the Thursday next preceding the 17th.

ART. IV.—Political, or any other discussions foreign to the purposes of the Association, as set forth in this Constitution, or any proceedings of such a tendency, are declared inimical to the purposes of this organization, and are prohibited.

ART. V.—This Constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting of the Association, by a vote of three-fourths of the members present.

BY-LAWS.

1. Every Graduate desiring to become a member of this Association shall be admitted upon paying an initiation fee of ten dollars.

2. At each annual meeting, the Presiding Officer shall appoint an Executive Committee of five members, whose duty it shall be to make all needful preparations and arrangements for the ensuing meeting, and transact such other business as may not devolve upon the other officers of the Association.

3. The Treasurer shall disburse all the moneys of the Association upon the order of the Executive Committee, attested by the signature of its Chairman, and shall at each annual meeting make a full report of his receipts and disbursements.

4. The Secretary shall cause a book of records to be kept, exhibiting the address and occupation of every member of the Association.

5. The records of the Association shall be preserved at West Point, N. Y., and shall be open to the inspection of the members.

6. All members of the Association who may be prevented, by any cause, from personally attending the annual meeting, are expected to notify the Secretary, and to impart such information in regard to themselves as they may think proper, and as may be of interest to their fellow-members.

7. No member of the Association shall speak more than once on any subject or question of business, and no longer than five minutes, without the consent of the meeting being first obtained.

8. A two-thirds vote of all the members present at any regular meeting shall be required to alter or amend these By-Laws.

9. Cushing's Manual of Parliamentary Law shall be authority for the government and regulation of all meetings of this Association.

~~The~~ Graduates are earnestly requested to point out any errors, and to supply deficiencies, in the following Register. Almost every Graduate can furnish the Secretary of the Association with at least a few of the lacking dates and facts, which, in after years, cannot be ascertained without very great labor, if at all.
